Unity government strong possibility

As The Canadian Jewish News went to press Oct. 31, Israelis were girding for the Nov. 1 general election that may well be the most decisive in Israel's brief history.

As reported by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency and The Jerusalem Post Feature Service, these were the chief developments in the week before Israelis cast their vote:

The Decima poll, commissioned by the Labor Party, gave Labor and its allies of the centre and left a 63-57 seat lead over Likud and its allies on the right.

But a Maariv poll conducted by the Modi'in Ezrachi organization gave Likud a 10-vote edge over Labor, and the Likud's rightist bloc a comfortable majority over Labor's leftist bloc.

• This week's firebombing of an Israeli bus which left four Israelis dead could swing undecided votes to Likud, which advocates a tougher line on dealing with the continuing unrest in the territories.

The victims, who included three children, were killed in Jericho, a West Bank town 15 miles east of Jerusalem.

The attack appears to be the worst on Israeli civilians in the territories since the beginning of the Palestinian uprising there more than 10 months ago.

Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin had told the cabinet that "very serious preparations" had been made to ensure quiet when Israeli settlers in the territories go to the polls.

A soldier who was on the bus said he tried to rescue Rachel Weiss but she refused to leave the vehicle that was engulfed in smoke and flames. Weiss, 26, and her three children — Nathaniel, 3, Raphael, 2 and Ephraim, 10 months — burned to death while the father was rescued from the burning bus.

"She didn't want to go. She said, 'But, I have a baby,' " Sgt. Ron Greenwald told state-run Israel Radio. "After a few seconds I realized I couldn't stay another second because the situation was very bad. With the last of the strength I had, I escaped from the bus."

The family was travelling to attend a relative's bar mitzvah celebration, Israel Radio reported.

Yitzhak Shamir

Five passengers also were injured in the firebombing, at least one seriously, an army spokesman and hospital officials said.

Military tractors began uprooting trees from the roadside where the five Molotov cocktails were thrown at the Israeli bus, Israel Radio reported.

During recent months more than 100 Molotov cocktails have been thrown at Israeli vehicles near Jericho, the broadcast said.

• There were few surprises and no knockout punches in a television debate between Premier Yitzhak Shamir and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, who are vying for the chance to head Israel's next government.

Moscow cultural centre important breakthrough

By CHARLES HOFFMAN

JERUSALEM (JPFS) —

Glasnost makes strange bedfellows. Striking confirmation of this can be found in a historic meeting that took place in Moscow last week. Refuseniks and cultural activists sat together with Soviet officials and Diaspora Jews to launch a Jewish cultural centre in the Soviet capital, as an adjunct to the Moscow Jewish Musical Theatre.

Adin Steinsaltz

Refusenik Yuli Kosharovsky hailed it as "the most important breakthrough on Jewish culture in the Soviet Union over the last half century. It represents the first example of a readiness of the Soviet government to recognize and implement actions which will provide for the rehabilitation of the victims of the cultural genocide which has taken place against the Jewish people over the past 50 years."

Coming from a man who has been engaged in a bitter fight with the authorities for 17 years over his right to live in Israel, this is significant testimony indeed. To underscore the importance of the project, Kosharovsky added that it entails "Soviet government recognition that the Hebrew language is at the heart of Jewish culture."

The centre is named after Solomon Mikhoels, the Russian Jewish actor who was murdered by Stalin's agents in 1948. Surviving members of his family in Israel are to be invited to the centre's official opening in February. The dedication is intended to serve as a rehabilitation of Mikhoels and other Jewish intellectuals murdered by Stalin during the black years of Soviet Jewry (1948-53).

In its first phase the centre will have a library containing works in Russian, Hebrew, Yiddish and English; an audio-visual centre with materials in the same languages; a Jewish museum; an art gallery; and a coffee lounge. Later the centre will sponsor classes in Hebrew and Yiddish, publication of a journal of Jewish cultural affairs, a book shop and Jewish film festivals.

The cultural centre, attached to the Moscow Jewish Musical Theatre, is to be run by a management committee that will include Jewish cultural activists Michael Tchlenov and Velvel Chernin. The chairman of the committee will be Michael Gluz, who has been the artistic director of the theatre for the past 10 years. Several Refuseniks besides Kosharovsky will also take part.

The establishment of the centre was achieved through extensive negotiations conducted by Isi Leibler, president of the Australian Jewish community, with the Soviet ministry of culture, which oversees the operation of the Moscow Jewish Theatre. In fact, the centre is to be a joint project of the Australian Jewish community and the Soviet ministry of culture, with input from Soviet Jews as well.

Leibler, who spent the past two weeks in Moscow finalizing the agreement on the centre, has worked for Soviet Jews for close to 30 years, most recently through the World Jewish Congress (WJC).

He has also helped mobilize the Australian government behind this cause, and Australian diplomatic backing in Moscow seems to have been an important ingredient in setting up the cultural centre.

Australia and the Soviet Union are soon to sign a "human contacts agreement," which will facilitate cultural and other exchanges between the two countries.

PLO wants Israel to vote for "peace"

JERUSALEM (JTA) —

The Palestine Liberation Organization seems to have nothing to lose and much to gain from its unprecedented involvement in Israel's election campaign.

Whatever the outcome of the voting, the PLO is likely to emerge with an improved image among Israeli Arabs; even, perhaps, among some Jews; and most important, in world opinion.

The PLO seeks to shake off its identification with terrorism and appear as a legitimate political movement with whom it is possible to negotiate.

Its message is that a terrorist organization, after all, would hardly encourage its supporters to work for political change in Israel in order to pave the way for negotiations.

This is precisely what the PLO has been doing. Only a week before the elections, two PLO leaders, Abu Mazen and Khaled el-Hassan, urged Israeli Arabs to vote for the "forces of peace."

They mentioned no specific party, but allowed for a wide range of choice — from the Hadash Communists on the extreme left to Shinui in the center.

All of those parties favor an international conference for Middle East peace, which is the goal of the PLO.

Of course, its notion of a conference differs sharply from that of say, Shimon Peres' Labor Party.

But any kind of international conclave is abhorrent to Yitzhak Shamir's Likud party and the parties to its right.

The PLO also believes that encouragement of the "positive elements" within the Israeli public will, if successful, lead to direct Israeli-PLO negotiations, though even the Labor Party has vowed not to talk with the PLO.

On the face of it, the PLO wants a moderate government in Israel with which it may be able to reach some sort of understanding.

It wants to use the upcoming elections as a tool to change Israel from within, an alternative to the armed struggle which nevertheless remains on the Palestinian agenda.

But some Israeli analysts believe that by urging Israelis to vote for the left, the PLO will scare off potential Labor voters who will support the right-wing parties out of fear of a possible deal with the PLO.

That, according to some theorists, is what the PLO in fact wants. They believe

B'nai B'rith settles libel case

By MYRON LOVE

WINNIPEG —

Recognizing its appeal against one of the largest libel damage awards in Canadian history was going badly, B'nai B'rith Canada has dropped its appeal and reached an out of court settlement with former federal Progressive Conservative candidate Luba Fedorkiw.

Fedorkiw had sued the B'nai B'rith League for Human Rights claiming the League's investigation into rumors of anti-semitic remarks emanating from Fedorkiw's camp cost her her chances of winning the Winnipeg North riding in the 1984 federal election when reports of the investigation were leaked to The Winnipeg Sun.

Although the newspaper story exonerated Fedorkiw, even eliciting praise for her from then-League chairman Israel Ludwig, she felt the damage had been done and sued the B'nai B'rith for libel.

A jury in November found the B'nai B'rith guilty of malice aforethought for letting news of the investigation out and awarded Fedorkiw $400,000.

The B'nai B'rith's appeal came before the Manitoba Court of Appeal in mid-October where it was receiving a quite unsympathetic hearing from the justices who were clearly in agreement with the November jury.

The amount of the settlement has not been disclosed. In addition, the League has officially apologized to Fedorkiw for any damage the publicity might have caused to her personal or professional reputation and agreed to put the apology in print in newspaper advertisements.

In a statement released on Oct. 21, the League conceded "allegations or rumors that it received that Federkiw was anti-semitic was groundless."

Fedorkiw was quoted as saying the settlement vindicates her. "The money was secondary," she said. "The apology was what I wanted. If B'nai B'rith had apologized in the beginning, we could have avoided a costly court case. I am happy the matter has been laid to rest and I can get on with my life."

The teacher and former school trustee plans to continue teaching and will probably attempt to run for office again in the future.

The Ukrainian-Canadian Committee hailed the settlement as a major step toward improved Jewish-Ukrainian relations.

No comment was available from the B'nai B'rith Winnipeg offices.

Kristallnacht anniversary poignant

By
RABBI W. GUNTHER PLAUT

Lights will be turned on in many places on the night of Nov. 9/10, in commemoration of what has become known as Kristallnacht, the event which marked the beginning of the end of European Jewry. For on that night, 50 years ago, the Nazis learned that they could do with Jews whatever they wanted, and that the world would stand by and do nothing.

Rabbi Plaut

Up to then, the Hitler program for German Jews had been to make the country judenrein, free of Jews, by pushing or throwing them out of the country as quickly as possible. Nearly half of them had in fact emigrated, but the Nazis wanted quicker action and waited for a useful pretext. Their chance came in early November when a young Jew, who wanted to call attention to the Nazis' inhumanity, killed the Third Secretary of the German embassy in Paris. Propaganda Minister Josef Goebbels saw this as the looked-for opportunity, and with the help of the SA (the brown-shirted shock troops of the party) he engineered a "popular uprising."

Order given

Word went out to destroy all German synagogues in a single night, arrest as many prominent Jews as possible, and ship them forthwith to concentration camps. The Nazis would demonstrate once and for all that immediate emigration — anywhere — was the only route left to Jews. No more "adjustment" to ghettoized life; no more hope that in time German anti-Jewish policies would meliorate as they had so often in the past. This was to let the Jews know that their last chance had come.

In the afternoon of Nov. 9, 1938 word got around that some big Juden-Aktion (anti-semitic action) was planned. A friendly police officer came to my parents' home in Berlin and suggested that my father should disappear for a while, until the Aktion was finished. When a few hours later the SA troopers came for him he was nowhere to be found, and my mother feigned ignorance of his whereabouts. Others on the SA list were not as fortunate; 20,000 were beaten and dragged away and a score were killed.

Synagogues burned

Meanwhile, synagogues throughout the land were set on fire, their chandeliers and windows and the fronts of all Jewishly owned stores were smashed and the contents looted. The broken glass which littered German streets later gave the event its name Kristallnacht, the night of broken crystal. On that night Jews lost their last vestige of human rights. And when the world was only politely critical the Nazis knew that from here on they could do with Jews what they wanted. Kristallnacht thus became the beginning of the end.

The next day thousands of German Jews lined up for that long and all too often fruitless wait before foreign consulates. There were few who would take them: Palestine was shut down by the British, and others like Canada simply said No. Among the notable exceptions were Shanghai and the Dominican Republic, and many went there without knowing precisely what these escape hatches betokened.

On the morning of Nov. 10, in far away Cincinnati, Ohio, I got up to prepare for my wedding which had been planned for that very afternoon. We knew nothing of Kristallnacht; it had not made the news. My bride and I were married without realizing that my father was in hiding and that German Jewry had been irrevocably shattered like broken glass. Only after the wedding was over did a telephone call from New York convey the bitter news.

And ever since, our personal anniversary has been overlaid by the memory of our people's tragedy.

Jewish groups monitor landmark cases

All eyes on U.S. Supreme Court

By ANDREW CARROLL

NEW YORK (JTA) —
The new Supreme Court term has shaped up as a busy one for Jewish organizations, with the court agreeing to hear arguments in two key church-state cases and in a review of a landmark civil rights decision.

Beyond those individual cases, the term will be watched for signs of President Reagan's influence in shaping the court.

For instance, Reagan's third and most recent appointee to the high court, Justice Anthony Kennedy, may be in a position to cast the deciding vote in a review of Patterson vs. McLean Credit Union.

The court will use that case to decide whether to overturn a 1976 ruling, Runyon vs. McCrary, that upheld a broad interpretation of the Civil Rights Act of 1866. The Reconstructionist-era law barred race discrimination in both the public and private sectors.

If the court overturns its 12-year-old ruling, it will "take away a powerful remedy for victims of discrimination," said Jill Kahn, associate director of legal affairs at the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith.

ADL, along with the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council, American Jewish Congress, American Jewish Committee, the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and more than 100 other religious and civil rights organizations have signed onto an amicus brief urging the court to hold fast to the Civil Rights Act.

The court has begun hearing arguments in the case but is not expected to issue a ruling before the first of the year.

A second major civil rights case may not engender as unanimous a response among Jewish groups. In hearing City of Richmond (Va.) vs. J. A. Croson Co., the court will consider a city ordinance that required city contractors to set aside 30% of city contracts to minority-owned businesses.

Oppose quotas

In Supreme Court decisions on affirmative action going back 10 years, including five during the last two terms, the court has consistently upheld almost all types of race and gender preference programs.

But those decisions were very closely argued, said Marc Stern, co-director of the AJCongress Commission on Law and Social Action. "There is intense speculation that the court will undo much of its prior approval of affirmative action," said Stern.

Few organizations have yet to take official stands on the current case. But most Jewish groups have long stood in opposition to hiring quotas.

In the church-state realm, the court decided that it will hear an appeal of two lower court decisions that barred both a menorah and a nativity scene from being displayed on public property in Pittsburgh.

The cases, County of Allegheny vs. American Civil Liberties Union and Chabad vs. ACLU, will mark the first time that the court will decide on the constitutionality of a menorah display in addition to creche or cross displays.

The case also will pit Jewish organizations against one another. Arguing in favor of the menorah display is Chabad, the Lubavitch Chassidic movement. Representating one of the plaintiffs in the case who challenges the display is the ADL.

Opponents of public religious displays have mixed feelings about the court's decision to hear the cases. On one hand, the court is in a position to deliver a decisive ruling on an issue that has remained unclear in state and lower court rulings. On the other hand, most of those rulings have gone against the displays, and opponents fear a reversal of that pattern.

The court has also agreed to hear a case involving free exercise of religion that may have far-reaching implications.

In France vs. department of employment security, an Illinois man says he was denied state unemployment benefits because he refused to work on Sunday, his sabbath, despite the fact that he belonged to no organized church or denomination.

Although a previous Supreme Court decision upheld the principle of a religious worker's rights, the current case will ask the court, in essence, to define a religion or religious belief deserving constitutional protection.

And Jewish groups will closely track Abortion Rights Mobilization vs. United States Catholic Conference, in which the pro-choice group is attempting to challenge the tax-exempt status of a church group involved in what it calls "political activity."

Race: the real issue in the U.S. election

By RICHARD COHEN

WASHINGTON —
We all know the "L" word and why Michael Dukakis won't say it. But do we know the "R" word and why neither candidate will say it? The answer to the second is that, for different reasons, they are both afraid.

Alexis de Tocqueville, should he peer down at the 1988 campaign, would not be surprised at some of the issues raised. More than a century ago, the French traveler in the United States wrote that race would remain an abiding American issue. The only thing that might confuse De Tocqueville is the absence of the word itself. Once he learned the code words, though, he would feel very much at home.

The first of these is "crime." Of course, whites commit crime. But the crime most white Americans fear is Black crime. In that regard, George Bush has been given the gift of Willie Horton, the Massachusetts killer who was furloughed, escaped and raped a woman in Maryland. Furloughs are a routine fixture of the American penal system, but it was Dukakis' bad luck that his wayward prisoner happened to be Black. Had Horton been white, it is safe to say the furlough issue wold have lost some of its punch.

Next, De Tocqueville would have to learn the meaning of four letters — ACLU. To the extent that the American Civil Liberties Union is perceived to advocate something called "the rights of criminals," it, too, becomes a part of the unspoken race issue — as does the difference between the candidates about capital punishment. Worse, the ACLU in particular and liberalism in general are linked to something called "the courts." In the popular imagination, the courts use legal coercion to desegregate everything from the schools to the work place to the neighborhood. De Tocqueville would soon learn that even "neighborhood" can be another code word for race.

De Tocqueville, as sharp an observer as there ever was, would not be fooled by such terms as "Reagan Democrats." These 8.4 million voters are those who deserted the Democratic Party in 1984 to vote for Ronald Reagan. They did so for a variety of reasons. But this piece of the electorate, whether in the South or in the North, can be easily motivated by race. In such northern cities as Philadelphia and Chicago, race is the dominant issue. It is in those cities that so-called ethnic politicians such as Frank Rizzo and Edward Vrdolyak have converted to Republicans.

In the South, the counterpart of the ethnic vote is the so-called "Bubba vote." These are lower and lower-middle class white males for whom race is and has been an important issue. As former George Wallace voters (or the sons of them), their racial attitudes are no secret. And it is no secret why in presidential elections the South is now as solidly Republican as it once was Democratic. A reason Democrats lose the South is that a hunk of the white vote, maybe 60%, has fled to the GOP. And a reason for that is race.

Ever since Richard Nixon, the GOP has wooed voters either afraid or of hostile to Blacks — an amoral strategy wholly in keeping with the Nixonian ethic that the end justifies the means. Bush is merely reaping what's been sown. That's not racist in the Jim Crow sense of the word, but it does nothing to advance racial harmony, either. It sends a signal — one clear enough to be heard in Bubba's pickup.

We all recognize the importance of race as a political issue. Yet it hardly gets discussed. For instance, a variety of explanations are advanced for why Dukakis was riding high in the polls before the Democratic national convention, but plummeted afterwards. We are told Bush pummeled him with the Pledge of Allegiance and other "cultural" issues. But could it be that Dukakis stumbled when he went from standing up to Jesse Jackson to embracing him? Could it be that a piece of Dukakis' popularity had to do with him being the Great White Hope of the primary season? You bet it could.

As for Dukakis, his silence on the race issue is almost as dispiriting as Bush's willingness to take advantage of it. To the degree that he can he shies from Jackson. He calls himself a liberal, but won't define what liberalism is. The civil rights revolution, after all, was not the work of conservatives.

Newspaper columns are exercises in miniaturization. There is much more to the Reagan or Bush vote than racism and there is more to liberalism than a concern for Blacks. But one of the more depressing aspects of this campaign is the willingness of both candidates to accept the status quo on race, either to receive its bounty (Bush), or to minimize the damage (Dukakis). In November, one will win and one will lose — but neither can be proud.

Election Update

4,895 Jews in new riding

Axworthy fights for more growth in Winnipeg

By MYRON LOVE

WINNIPEG -

Much of the new Winnipeg South Centre riding was represented in Ottawa since 1979 by Liberal member of Parliament Lloyd Axworthy, a cabinet minister in both the Trudeau and Turner governments.

The constituency, with a Jewish population of 4,985 (1986 census) is the second most populous Jewish federal riding in Winnipeg. It takes in the heavily Jewish areas of River Heights and the Corydon/Osborne/Wellington Cres. highrise condos and apartment buildings.

Axworthy, a former professor at the University of Winnipeg, represented the Corydon/Osborne area in the provincial legislature before going to Ottawa. He is being challenged by veteran CBC broadcaster Garth Dawley who is carrying the Progressive Conservative banner and New Democratic Party candidate Les Campbell, a long time NDP worker and government adviser.

The central local issue, in Axworthy's view, is to promote growth in Winnipeg by building on the multi-million dollar urban renewal projects he directed towards Winnipeg during his tenure as the minister of employment and Winnipeg's pre-eminent voice in Ottawa during the latter Trudeau years. "Manitoba has not been well represented federally under the Mulroney government," he said.

PC challenger Dawley is coming out swinging on behalf of the environment. He faults Axworthy for neglecting Winnipeg's rivers, three of which run through the South Centre riding.

On the question of free trade, the candidates defend their parties' positions. Dawley says that almost all local manufacturers favor the deal. "I've spent a lot of time studying and researching the issue," he says.

"I am satisfied that, although a quarter of the workforce may be affected, free trade will bring Manitobans more prosperity and bring down prices. Canadian entrepreneurs will benefit because our products are often superior to American products. We will end up with more money to finance the social programs that make living in Canada so good."

Both Axworthy, the Liberal trade critic for the past three years, and New Democrat Les Campbell disagree. They are concerned the Mulroney government has signed away Canada's sovereignty for insignificant financial gains. They also expect free trade will have a severe impact on Manitoba's industrial sector, ability to control natural resources and on the province's environment.

Garth Dawley

Lloyd Axworthy

On most other issues, particularly those of concern to the Jewish community, the three candidates are in general agreement, standing squarely behind Israel. They would offer Canadian assistance in the search for a peace which recognizes Israel's security and the rights of the Palestinian people.

They oppose Canadian dealings with the Palestine Liberation Organization unless or until it renounces violence. "Canada traditionally supports forces of reasonableness and moderation," said Dawley.

On the question of Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union, Dawley praised External Affairs Minister Joe Clark for his efforts in helping achieve the departure of Natan Sharansky and Ukrainian dissident Danylo Shumuk.

Axworthy, as a member of the external affairs committee of the House of Commons, has raised the issue directly with the Soviets. Both he and NDPer Campbell, while optimistic about the present trends with glasnost, both agree the diplomatic pressure should be kept up.

On the question of the Deschenes Commission and Nazi war criminals in Canada, Campbell and Axworthy both support the commission's recommendations and would find evidence from Eastern Europe acceptable as long as it meets the standards of Canadian courts.

Axworthy however is concerned about the delay in implementation of the commission's recommendations and intends to raise the question again to try to get answers.

Dawley was reluctant to comment on legal matters. "It is strange though," he said, "that crimes can be perceived as not so serious because so much time has passed."

On the issue of hatemongers, Dawley expressed his strong feelings for the victims of the Holocaust. Although he draws the line at anybody or any group that abuses the freedom our country allows to preach hate against other groups, he doesn't know whether government can legislate effective controls against it.

Campbell and Axworthy both think hatemongers should be tackled through amendments to the Human Rights Act rather than the Criminal Code. "Human Rights violations would allow for easier convictions," said Axworthy.

Campbell pointed to the legislation passed by the former NDP government in Manitoba last year concerning signs and hate literature as the way to go.

CIC helps question the political candidates

By JEFF ROSEN

TORONTO —

Canadian parliamentarians should support constructive efforts to move from confrontation to negotiation in the Mideast in line with traditional Canadian policy principles, states a new publication from the Canada-Israel Committee.

Making The Case is a pro-Israel advocacy handbook for the upcoming federal election. Written by David Weinberg, director of research and education for the CIC, the publication is designed to assist Canada's Jewish community in lobbying local political candidates for a strong Canada-Israel relationship.

"While the advocacy challenge is real, it can be met," the publication states. "The case for Israel is a good one. It is one which the majority of our fellow citizens are willing to hear, and to which they have historically responded sympathetically. It is up to us to make it, and to do so effectively."

Outlining its 12-point lobbying agenda, the CIC urges elected representatives to support constructive peace initiatives for the Middle East.

At the same time, CIC wants Canada to oppose attempts to impose peace settlements, avoid prejudging the outcome of negotiations between the parties directly concerned, encourage voices of moderation and to support the establishment of transitional mechanisms aimed at bridging the gap between Arabs and Israelis over time.

"Candidates for Parliament should understand that we consider calls for an international peace conference in the Middle East which do not include confirmation of the importance of direct negotiations, to be dangerous and unacceptable," the CIC states.

The CIC is calling on MPs to support the continuation of "strong, steadfast and warm Canada-Israel relations" in all sectors. It says that despite differences between the two countries on specific issues, Israel's legitimacy or friendship with Canada should not be allowed to be called into question.

The importance of Israel's security must also be made apparent to aspiring politicians, says the CIC, stressing that a stable military balance is the foundation of the peace process.

"Borders are important to war avoidance, as well as defence. The more conducive Israel's borders are to deterring conventional attacks and terrorist operations, the greater the incentive for the Arabs to keep the peace."

Continuing the discussion of Arabs, the CIC urges the candidates to call on each of the Arab states and Palestinians to formally recognize Israel and to condemn the use of violence of any type against Israel.

More specifically, political candidates should call for an immediate end to the Palestinian rioting in the West Bank and Gaza and repudiate the PLO until such time as it recognizes Israel.

The CIC praises Prime Minister Brian Mulroney for being a leading advocate of effective international action against terrorism and says Canada should maintain its fight against terrorism.

On the economic front, the CIC says Canada should support government initiatives aimed at promoting Canada-Israel trade and stronger economic ties and should cooperate with Israel in providing development assistance to the Third World.

Polling changes political system, expert says

TORONTO —

The practice of polling has fundamentally changed the nature of the political system for politicians, the public and the media alike, says the president of a leading polling and marketing agency.

Martin Goldfarb, president of Goldfarb Consultants Inc., addressed the issue of polling before a group of journalists and representatives from the Jewish community at a recent meeting sponsored by Canadian Jewish Congress communications committee.

Goldfarb, pollster for the Liberal Party of Canada, said that polling has made life more difficult for politicians as it has provided the public more information. This, he said, means that there is little politician can do today that is secret. The result is a more dynamic, participatory democracy.

At the same time, polling has also changed the role of the media in covering politics.

"Traditionally, politicians looked to the print media as the source of insight," said Goldfarb. "They provided information and interpreted events for the public and politician, who, in turn, recognized the power and potency of journalism.

The journalists "spent a long time with politicians on trains and buses trying to sense the mood of the political campaign. They had a vital and significant role and place in the political equalibrium of society," the pollster added.

With the growing use of polls though, all this has changed, Goldfarb said. Now journalists essentially report the news, while pollsters interpret public opinion in political campaigns.

"The pollster has wedged his way between the media and politician and the public," Goldfarb explained. "He is the connecting link in both directions. It has redefined how the public receives information about itself."J.R.

RABBI MOSES J. BURAK

Question: Why are we required to say "baruch hu u-baruch shemo" after the name of Hashem is mentioned in a Hebrew benediction?

Berl Blum, Toronto

ANSWER: The origin lies in Deut. 32:3: "When I proclaim the name of the Lord, ascribe ye greatness unto our God." There are additional explanations.

The Kitzur Shulman Arukh, Chapter 20:1, simply states that when one hears a blessing, one must respond, after the name of Hashem, with the words "baruch hu, blessed be He, and blessed be His Name." No reason is given for this rule. But, that does not mean that there is no reason for this practice.

Rabbi Burak

If I had to add a reason of my own, I would find it in the Avodah that we read in the Musaf of Yom Kippur. There we find a graphic picture of prayer and devotion: "And the Kohanim and the people . . . when they heard the honored, the awesome, and ineffable Name emanating from the High Priest's mouth, in holiness and purity, would kneel and prostrate themselves, and give thanks, and touch the ground with their faces and say: 'Blessed be the Name of His glorious kingdom for ever and ever.' "

That's what was done by all who heard the Tetragrammaton pronounced.

Well, we don't use the Ineffable Name, the Tetragrammaton, in our service of worship. We regard it as too sacred for us to pronounce. We substitute another word for it, such as, Lord. But, when we hear a benediction that calls out His name, we respond with the words, "baruch hu, Blessed be He, and blessed be His Name."

The great authorities, the Rishonim, gave good and sufficient reasons for this practice. The tradition stems from Rebbeinu Asher Yechieli z.l. His son Rabbi Yaacov z.l. tells us in his Code, Orach Chaim, that he heard his father say these words as his response in the middle of a benediction.

Blessing required

According to the Tur, that's the way Rabbeinu Asher z.l. understood the instructions given in Psalms, Chapter 34:4: "Gadlu, Magnify, the Lord with me, and let us exalt His name together." Although that sentence in the Psalms is interpreted another way in the Talmud, his practice is not precluded by it.

All the explanations, including this one, are gathered together in the Mishneh Berurah, on the Code, O. H. Chapter 124. In note 22 there, in the Mishneh Berurah, we find a most interesting point drawn from the honor we give to a righteous man. Whenever a good man's name is mentioned, we are ordered to bless him.

When the name of a great scholar is mentioned even in print, it is followed by the letters shlita, "let him live for a long happy life." Well then, if this is the honor we give a man, how much more so must honour be given when the name of Hashem is mentioned. We must bless His Name.

This raises a tiny problem. Some people take this very literally; they want to cry out "blessed be He, and blessed be His name," whenever the Divine Name is mentioned, even when it occurs in a prayer without a benediction. That's wrong.

Another challenge comes from the Aruch ha-Shulchan, on the same chapter of the Code. That sage points out that with certain benedictions you may not say baruch hu u-baruch shemo. When the shofar is blown for the congregation by one man, he alone says the benediction. The congregation is forbidden to say any word other than Amen.

The claim is made by the Aruch ha-Shulchan, that the people get so accustomed to the formula of baruch hu etc., that they will continue it even where it is forbidden. He wanted it dropped.

TORONTO—

With its boundaries slightly changed from the 1984 election, York Centre is bounded by Jane and the Black Creek on the west, Steeles Ave. on the north, the Don River Valley on the east and highway 401 on the south.

In the 1984 election Liberal Bob Kaplan won York Centre with a plurality of 9,672. In that election, the PCs polled 11,138 and the NDP 8,037.

Kaplan, the Liberal incumbent, is fighting his 7th general election (he won 5 of the previous 6) and has been in political life for 20 years. His most vivid memory in the House of Commons is when the Deschenes Commission report was tabled, the report that called on the government to prosecute Nazi war criminals in Canada.

As solicitor-general in the Trudeau and Turner cabinets, Kaplan was the one who started government action that led to the Deschenes Commission.

"There has been a lot of foot dragging by the Mulroney government since the report came out," he said. "They are getting a lot of political mileage out of what little they have done."

The government should be moving faster on the war criminals issue, he said, adding that Deschenes Commission staff should have already collected evidence in Russia and elsewhere for prosecution of the criminals. Such evidence should be collected according to Canadian standards of justice, he noted.

The statement by External Affairs Minister Joe Clark blaming Israel for the Palestinian uprising signalled a change in Canada's position on Israel, he said. "It was unforgiveable. I hope that Jews will send a message to Joe Clark in this election."

The York Centre MP said Clark also showed his anti-Israel bias by arranging a meeting in Montebello, Que., of Canadian Jews and Arabs. "He is trying to develop an anti-Israel faction within the Jewish community," Kaplan claimed.

He said Clark has displayed "poor political judgment" at other times as well. "At the UN, our voting record on Israel is not as good as it was under a Liberal government."

In the 1984 election, both Liberal and Conservative candidates vowed to back stronger anti-hate literature measures, he said. But the Conservative government did nothing, even though the Law Reform Commission recommended such action.

Kaplan said he favors eliminating the need for provincial attorneys-general to approve laying charges under the anti-hate legislation.

The NDP standard bearer in York Centre is Cathy Mele, 47, an elementary school teacher in North York for 25 years and a community activist in the Downsview area.

She has been particularly involved in the Heritage language program for those whose mother tongue is not English and in human rights issues.

She is critical of the Mulroney government for lack of action on the Deschenes Commission report, calling for prosecution of war criminals in Canada. "These war criminals and their victims are getting older and time is of the essence," she said.

As a teacher, she is particularly concerned with the effect on education of the free trade agreement with the U.S. Her view coincides with the position taken by the Canadian Teachers Federation: "We expect that publicly supported elementary and secondary school systems across Canada will face increasing pressure (under free trade) to perform more closely to their generally less adequately funded and less equitable U.S. counterparts."

Mele wants an increase in affordable and accessible day care spaces, with the emphasis on non-profit rather than commercial enterprises. The present legislation is inadequate in meeting these goals, she said.

She affirmed the right of Israel to exist within safe and secure borders, adding that she would not presume to criticize its internal affairs.

Her party favors direct negotiations to settle the conflict. She thinks that, in addition to Canada's role in peace-keeping in the Middle East, there should be other connections between Israel and Canada to solidify relations.

As an exponent of freedom of expression, Mele said there should be a way to formulate laws to reduce, if not eliminate, the dissemination of hate literature.

"I abhor anti-semitism and racism in general," she said. "It appalls me that Zundel says that the Holocaust did not take place. How painful it must be for people who lived through that reality to have those events dragged up and relived again — I can think of no greater nightmare."

Mele, an Italian, said: "I don't think that because I have an ethnic name that I will automatically garner their votes. I would rather earn their votes through the work I have done in the community."

The Conservative candidate in York Centre is Rocco Sebastiano, a 26-year-old engineer running for the first time for elective office.

A reactor safety analyst for Ontario Hydro, Sebastiano has already had a lot of work experience in his young life as a carpenter, construction laborer, file clerk, pharmacy delivery boy and pharmacy stock clerk. His wife, Marilena, is a separate school elementary teacher and they live on Benjamin Boake Trail in the riding.

Though it's his first run, Sebastiano is no stranger to the electoral wars, having acted as campaign chairman for Michael Cohen in York Centre in 1984 and for Ron Atkey in the 1979-80 campaigns.

On the situation in Israel, Sebastiano said it is not enough for the PLO to say it recognizes Israel's right to exist as a condition of peace talks.

On Canada's relations with Israel, Sebastiano said Prime Minister Mulroney has demonstrated his commitment to Israel. On a visit to Ottawa, he said he heard "that Joe Clark was having a bad day" when he made his controversial statements.

The PC candidate said he grew up with Jews and understands the centrality of Israel to the Jewish people.

On the question of Soviet Jewry, he said: "If Soviet Jews want to come to Canada, our doors are open, the visas are waiting."

He said the Mulroney government's record on pursuing war criminals is a good one and its action in setting up the Deschenes Commission is proof of that policy. If, under the Canadian rules of evidence, witnesses from Eastern Bloc countries are able to testify, then such evidence should be gathered and used in prosecuting war criminals, he said.

U.S. policy on Israel expected to remain firm

By
WOLF BLITZER

WASHINGTON—
A senior state department official has predicted that the United States will pursue the general outline of Secretary of State George Shultz's Arab-Israeli peace initiative irrespective of a George Bush or Michael Dukakis victory in the presidential election.

Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern and Southern Asian Affairs Richard Murphy said the U.S. will remain actively engaged in the Arab-Israeli peace process "over the balance of the year and into the next." The U.S. commitment to the peace process, he added, remains "solid."

Testifying recently before the House foreign affairs subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East, Murphy said Shultz was "very conscious of the fact the clock is running on the administration, and he wants to hand on the most vital, the most dynamic initiative possible" to the next administration.

"Our Middle East policy will continue to reflect the fundamental continuity and bipartisanship that has characterized it in the past," Murphy said.

The assistant secretary rejected suggestions from the congressmen that the U.S. initiative put forward in recent months by Shultz has failed. The U.S. has an overriding national interest" to continue the peace process. "So it's going to be ongoing," he said.

After the Israeli elections on Nov. 1, he continued, "the new team in Israel will have to look at some of the enduring realities of the problem. We don't foresee any reshaping of the initiative as it was developed in the early months of 1988, and presented to the parties somewhat refined in our discussions...over the past eight or nine months. So I would not foresee a brand new approach or a brand new initiative."

Responding to questions from Democratic Representative Tom Lantos of California, Murphy said that the U.S. has detected a changed, more constructive Soviet attitude toward the Arab-Israeli conflict. But the assistant secretary said Washington and Moscow still disagree over the best way to get talks off the ground. "We're not seeing it procedurally in the same way," he said.

Murphy said that he recently told the Soviets not to expect any dramatic changes in U.S. policy after the election. "I told them in our last session that they should have no misunderstanding about the bipartisan nature of our Middle East approach," he said.

"Certainly, a new administration of whichever party is going to have its own emphases, but the parameters are out there and they shouldn't hold back waiting for an American election because the approach is ongoing and I think highly consistent...from one administration to the next."

Murphy said the continuing Palestinian uprising in the territories and King Hussein's decision to sever Jordan's ties to the West Bank have created "the largest political challenge the PLO has ever faced." But he said it remained unclear how the PLO leadership would respond.

"I honestly don't know what they are going to come up with," he said.

Carlucci defends sale of U.S. arms to Arabs

WASHINGTON (JTA) —
Defence Secretary Frank Carlucci denied last week that he believes U.S. arms sales to the Middle East should be approved mainly because they benefit the U.S. economy.

Carlucci told Israeli journalists at the Pentagon that the jobs issue was "legitimate," but "subsidiary" to the need for the United States to "retain our influence with the Arab countries" as an "honest broker in the peace process."

"It serves nobody's interest, neither ours nor Israel's, to break the security relationship" with moderate Arab states, Carluci said.

Carlucci told his audience, "We need a new sense of realism in Washington about the strategic purposes of our policies in the Middle East."

"The notion that U.S. defence cooperation with moderate Arab states poses a danger to Israel is ill-founded and untrue. Israel must regard non-American arms in the hands of its neighbors as a higher risk," the defence secretary said.

"It certainly does not serve Israel to have foreign (non-American) military advisers in countries like Jordan, Saudi Arabia and wherever else" the weapons are sold, he said.

Carluci was reacting to the response he received over a speech he made to the American-Arab Affairs Council in Huntington, W.Va.

Seymour Reich, international president of B'nai B'rith, had blasted Carlucci for telling the Arab council that "I see tens of billions of dollars worth of jobs going abroad instead of sustaining our key defence industries and bolstering the U.S. economy."

Morris Abram, chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, also criticized Carlucci, saying that the "unceasing thirst for military hardware" by Arab countries "serves only to heat up still further the overheated arms race in the Middle East."

Ran Kuriel, acting spokesman at the Israeli embassy here, said his government had no comment on either of Carlucci's statements.

Carlucci's comments came just a few months after a massive $30 billion arms deal was completed between Britain and Saudi Arabia, which has boosted the British ahead of the United States as the largest weapons supplier to the Middle East.

The concurrent U.S. sale of $1.9 billion in weaponry to Kuwait sharply divided the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, which vehemently opposed the sale, from other mainstream Jewish groups, such as the American Jewish Congress, which did not fight the sale.

Denies job link

Carlucci, who is planning to leave for visits to Israel, Egypt and Jordan, said that "jobs should not dictate U.S. security policies.

"On the contrary, we have consistently said that U.S. security policy should be determined independently of jobs."

The last trip to Israel by a U.S. defence secretary was made in 1986, by Carlucci's predecessor, Caspar Weinberger.

Carlucci said he was invited to Israel by its defence minister, Yitzhak Rabin, whom he called "one of Israel's best strategic thinkers."

Among the items Carlucci and Rabin are expected to discuss is Israel's participation in U.S. Star Wars research, specifically the Popeye air-to-ground missile that the air force is considering mounting on its B-52 bombers.

Joseph Polakoff, in Washington, adds:

Israel has expressed uneasiness to the United States that its qualitative edge in weaponry over its Arab neighbors is eroding under the reported transfer to the area of first-quality arms by China and the Soviet Union.

China has pledged directly to Carlucci that it has ceased sending nuclear-potential missiles to Saudi Arabia but reportedly has extended its arms deals with others in the Middle East. Now the Soviet Union is said to be poised to provide Syria with one of its most sophisticated warplanes.

Israeli officials told the state department that the Soviet Union and Syria have concluded an agreement by which the Soviet long-range, swing-wing Sukhoi 24 attack bomber will be delivered to Syria. The Sukhoi 24, Israelis noted, can carry a heavy cargo and is capable of flying low under Israeli radar detection.

The state department, however, believes a Moscow-Damascus accord has not yet been reached. "We cannot confirm reports an agreement has been concluded," the Department said in response to a reporter's question.

Saudis insistent on no-name boots

TEL AVIV (JTA) —
Officers of Saudi Arabia's elite Royal Horse Guards are riding high astride their Arabian steeds, wearing riding boots made in a Galilee kibbutz — but only after the Made in Israel labels have been removed.

Kibbutz Daphna, near the Lebanese border, manufactures boots and sandals at a factory they opened in 1964. It exports them to Britain, France, the United States and Japan, with annual revenues around $4 million.

The factory recently commissioned a French designer to produce a riding boot with a new sweat-absorbent liner. It is being marketed abroad by a British firm, and caught the eye of their Saudi customers.

The Saudi ordered the footwear on condition that all evidence of the country of origin be removed before it was shipped.

Kibbutz Daphna and the British company won't confirm or deny the story.

Israel's Election

Neither Labor nor Likud likely to win majority

Fierce ideological battles dominate campaign

By DAVID LANDAU

JERUSALEM (JTA) — The Israeli election on Nov. 1 is best understood as a battle between opposing ideological groups, rather than a contest between the two largest parties, Labor and Likud.

This is because neither Labor nor Likud stands the remotest chance of winning by itself the minimum governing majority of 61 seats in the 120-member Knesset.

They have never done it before. Each, in fact would be delighted to win as many as 45 seats.

This means that whichever party emerges with the larger number of seats will have to seek support from the smaller parties, if it is to cobble together a coalition government — or prevent its rival from doing so.

LIKUD. The Likud was originally founded as Gahal in the mid-1960s as an alignment of the rightist, nationalist Herut Party, headed by Menachem Begin, and the Liberal Party, which broadly represented a middle-class, anti-socialist constituency.

The Liberals had evolved in pre-state Jewish Palestine and in the Zionist movement abroad, where they were known as the General Zionists.

Subsequently, other smaller groups drifted into or broke away from the Likud orbit. The tiny Ometz faction of former Finance Minister Yigael Hurvitz has lately cast off its alliance with Labor and fallen into Likud's embrace.

The Likud leader, Premier Yitzhak Shamir, 73, headed the Lehi underground that fought the British in the last years of the Mandate.

Shamir is also a former ranking member of Mossad, Israel's foreign intelligence agency, and a one-time speaker of the Knesset. He joined Begin's second administration as foreign minister in 1981 and succeeded Begin as Prime Minister in 1983.

Other key Likud figures are Deputy Premier David Levy, who is also minister of housing; Ariel Sharon, the minister of commerce and industry; Moshe Arens, a minister without portfolio; and Moshe Nissim, the finance minister.

Except for Nissim, a Liberal, all belong to the party's Herut wing. Sharon and Arens are both former defence ministers, and Arens also served as ambassador to the United States.

Likud vehemently rejects Labor's attempts to depict it as a war party, or at best anti-peace. Party members argue that it was Likud that made peace with Egypt, and not by accident.

Their point is that in order to make peace with the Arabs, Israel must deal from a position of strength. The Arabs perceive Likud as the party of strength and determination, party members say.

Some Likud figures even compare Shamir to the late President Charles de Gaulle of France, who, coming out of the right wing, made the historic decision to pull France out of Algeria.

They hasten to add that the analogy applies only to the perception of the leader's strength and his ability to maneuver domestically, not to withdrawal as an instrument of policy.

After all, de Gaulle gave Algeria independence.

TEHIYA. This is an ultranationalist party that broke away from Likud over the Camp David accords and the return of all of Sinai to Egypt.

The party leader is Professor Yuval Ne'eman, a Tel Aviv University physicist of world renown who over the years has played a key role in the development of Israel's science-based industries.

Yuval Ne'eman

Other key party figures are Geula Cohen, Rabbi Eliezer Waldman, Gershon Shafat and Elyakim Haetzni.

Waldman and Shafat are leaders of the Orthodox Gush Emunim settlement movement. Haetzni, a lawyer and publicist, is an extreme right-winger from Kiryat Arba, the Gush Emunim stronghold adjacent to Hebron.

Tehiya's constituency is heavily based on the settlers in the West Bank. But clearly it has broader support. The opinion polls consistently predict it will enlarge on its current four seats in the Knesset.

According to the polls, it is especialy strong among young voters.

Its campaign message has been tougher repression of the Palestinian uprising. It calls for the wholesale deportation of Arab stone-throwers and troublemakers. It would annex the territories.

Tehiya demands a massive settlement drive to increase the Jewish population in the territories. But it does not call for the transfer out of Palestinians who are not considered political or security risks.

Tehiya claims it would provide the rigid ideological backbone of a Likud-led rightist government.

MOLEDET. This is a new party led by a controversial reserve general, Rehavim Zeevi. It explicitly calls for the transfer of the Arab populations of the West Bank and Gaza Strip to surrounding countries, but negotiated rather than forced.

Its credentials have been challenged by the left-liberal parties on grounds that it is racist. But the Central Election Committee upheld the party's right to run.

The challenge was based on a 1984 amendment to the Basic Law, which bars racist and anti-democratic parties from the Knesset. It was successful in the case of Rabbi Meir Kahane's Kach Party.

TSOMET. This is a Tehiya breakaway, headed by another reserve general, Rafael Eitan, a former chief of staff. It does not urge the transfer of Arabs, but demands a much tougher approach to the Palestinian uprising.

LABOR. In its various configurations, the Labor Party was the dominant force in Israeli politics from the pre-state era until the political upheaval of 1977, when it was unseated by Premier Menachem Begin's Likud.

Since then, doggedly led by Shimon Peres, Labor has been trying to recover its former pre-eminence.

It achieved parity with Likud in 1981 and again in 1984. But it was unable to form a government, because the orthodox parties aligned with Likud.

This year Labor is running without its ally, Mapam, a party much further to the left. Mapam broke its longtime alignment with Labor in 1984, because it refused to participate in the national unity coalition with Likud.

Peres is now foreign minister and was Premier for the first two years of the unity coalition. After him, the top Labor Party leader is Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin, also a former premier.

The conventional wisdom is that Peres, and probably Rabin, will have to step down if Labor does badly in the Nov. 1 elections.

Labor's campaign has centered largely on Peres' relatively successful record as Premier from 1984 to 1986. That period saw the withdrawal of the Israel Defence Force from Lebanon and a curbing of inflation.

Other top leaders of the Labor Party — Yitzhak Navon, the former President of Israel and now education minister; Gad Yaacobi, the minister of economics; and Moshe Shahal, the ambitious minister of energy — have been assigned relatively low profile roles by Labor campaign manager Ezer Weizman, a minister without portfolio.

Weizman prefers to play up Labor's fresh faces. They are a group of young politicians, several from the development towns, who won fairly safe slots on the party list.

Labor's policies on peace and the territories, the central issues of this campaign, suffer in contrast to the Likud program for lack of simplicity.

Labor wants Israel to divest itself of large areas of heavily Arab-populated country, while retaining strategic tracts here and there down to the banks of the Jordan River and the environs of Jerusalem.

Labor would demilitarize the areas of withdrawal. The map it suggests looks like a jigsaw puzzle and requires some cogitation to comprehend.

Labor is officially opposed to a Palestinian state. It is an open secret, however, that some of its members and future Knesset members would support the idea under certain conditions.

MAPAM. When Mapam split with Labor four years ago, political pundits were ready to bury it.

They considered the veteran Zionist-Socialist party to be without an identity, despite its powerful kibbutz and youth movements: Hakibbutz Haartzi and Hashomer Hatzair.

But a term of high-profile Knesset activism led by Mapam old-timers Chaike Grossman and Elazar Granot surprised everyone and improved the party's image.

Now, benefiting from an imaginative election campaign and a popular new leader in the person of Yair Tsaban, Mapam seems about to win a new lease on life. It hopes for two or three Knesset seats next week.

CENTER MOVEMENT-SHINUI. This is another Labor satellite party, non-Socialist on economic issues, thoroughly moderate on the issues of peace and the territories.

It evolved into its present form through a process of splits and regroupings that began with the breakup of Professor Yigal Yadin's once promising Democratic Movement for Change, which made the Knesset in the late 1970s.

It also gained from the still-birth last year of the Center Movement, founded by former Jewish Agency Chairman Léon Dulzin and Mayor Shlomo Lahat of Tel Aviv, a Likud man who broke with that party.

Shinui's leader, Professor Amnon Rubinstein, has weathered all the struggles since the days of the DMC, and is still a respected figure in Israeli politics.

He served through much of the present Knesset term as minister of communications and, in that capacity, achieved notable success modernizing the country's telephone and postal services.

But according to the polls, Shinui's prospects are not rosy, despite the agglomeration of the Center Movement and Independent Liberals at its core.

CITIZENS RIGHTS MOVEMENT. This party, founded and still run by the veteran feminist and human rights champion Shulamit Aloni, has been the success story of Israeli politics in the 1980s.

It came seemingly from nowhere to take three seats in the 1984 Knesset. Pollsters believe it can win four or five this time. That would make it a powerful force in the fragmented and polarized Knesset expected to emerge from the next elections.

Shulamit Aloni

The CRM's message has been sharpened and accentuated by the Palestinian uprising. It advocates Israel's withdrawal from the territories and a dialogue with the Palestinians. Domestically, it focuses on individual freedom, human rights and the rule of law in Israel proper and the territories.

Aloni, a lawyer, and her Knesset colleagues have been personally involved in the disclosure and subsequent investigations of dozens of cases of alleged excesses on the part of Israeli soldiers and security forces in the territories.

Labor and the CRM have locked horns during the campaign because of Labor's complaint that Aloni's party is depriving it of votes.

The CRM argues that a vote for it is a vote for Labor, because ultimately the President will not simply look to the largest single party to form a new government but to the leader with the best prospects of putting together a stable government.

Some Labor leaders see the rise of the CRM as a mixed blessing. Its staunch positions on personal freedom and against religious coercion have made it profoundly unpopular with the Orthodox parties, which Labor might need to form a government.

HADASH and PROGRESSIVE LIST FOR PEACE. They are expected to win a combined total of six seats, despite the creation of a new, competing Arab list.

Hadash is a Moscow-oriented Communist party. The Progressive List is ideologically aligned to the moderate wing of the PLO. Both advocate a 2-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Both are considered beyond the political pale by Labor as far as coalition partnership is concerned. But Labor feels it can trust both to help block Likud from forming a narrowly based coalition government.

Hadash is headed by Meir Wilner, the last veteran of the 1948 Knesset. Israeli Arab Knesset member Mohammed Miari heads the Progressive List.

NATIONAL RELIGIOUS PARTY. The NRP is now led by Professor Avner Shaki, a law professor and longtime political activist of rightist proclivities.

He went so far as to rule out a coalition deal with Labor. But he subsequently withdrew that statement.

Another key figure of the NRP is Hanan Porat, a founder of the militant Orthodox Gush Emunim settlement movement in the West Bank. He is No. 3 on the party list.

The NRP has been campaigning hard to hold on to a dwindling constituency. It consistently held 10 to 12 Knesset seats until the 1981 elections, when its representation was reduced to six seats.

In the 1984 elections, it won only four. The polls show no prospects for substantial improvement in next week's elections.

The NRP aims to appeal to the large numbers of Israelis who are products of the religious educational system, of which the NRP is the proud creator.

The election of Shaki as leader with his hawkish political line led to the secession of a group of moderates, who formed a new religious party, Meimad.

If the polls are right, it could touch off a domino effect in which the religious parties one-by-one end their decade-long alignment with Likud and begin to move toward Labor.

Meimad has made no formal commitment to Labor and is keeping its options open. But its platform, which explicitly favors territorial concessions for peace, puts it squarely in the Labor camp.

Its positions on religious issues differ from those of the other Orthodox parties. Meimad does not support coercive religious legislation, such as changes in the status of converts and laws governing business on the Sabbath. That makes it a tempting partner for labor and its non-Orthodox allies.

Meimad is led by Rabbi Yehuda Amital, founder and dean of the Har Etzion yeshiva at Alon Shvut, in the Etzion bloc of settlements south of Jerusalem. It is the largest of the Hesder yeshivot, where students combine religious studies with active military service.

DEGEL HATORAH. This is another new breakaway party that could be pivotal in the post-election coalition-building process.

The party is the creation of the venerable and feisty sage of Bnei Brak, Rabbi Eliezer Schach. It represents the culmination of the 92-year-old rabbi's long and bitter feud with the Chassidic wing of the Agudat Yisrael.

The last straw for Schach was the refusal of the Agudah newspaper Hamodia to reject paid advertisements from the New York-based Chabad Chassidic movement, whose philosophy Schach considers heretical.

The importance of Degel's role stems from Schach's basically dovish political philosophy. He is an outspoken opponent of the Greater Israel school of politics, which advocates the annexation of the territories.

SHAS. Known in full as the Sephardi Torah Guardians, this party represents a growing "return to one's roots" movement among the Sephardic population. It arose from nowhere in the 1984 elections to win four Knesset seats, matching the NRP, which has been in Israeli politics since 1948.

Yitzhak Peretz

Shas should be a firm ally of Likud. Its leader, Rabbi Yitzhak Peretz, a former interior minister, takes strongly hawkish positions on foreign and domestic issues. The party's rank-and-file is drawn from Likud and NRP voters.

The Shas platform stresses Sephardic heritage and traditions. It dwells proudly on the institutions of education and welfare the young movement has established nationwide.

AGUDAT YISRAEL. Another veteran religious party, Agudat Yisrael was stripped of its Sephardic component by the secession of Shas in 1984. It was further decimated by the recent breakaway of Degel Hatorah.

The Agudah has become a pale shadow of the flourishing Orthodox force it once was. It will be fortunate to win two seats in the 12th Knesset.

The party is led by the Gur Chassidim. Its list is headed by a Gur scholar, Rabbi Moshe Feldman, who was handpicked by the aged rebbe of Gur, Rabbi Simcha Bunum Alter.

The Agudah platform focuses on religious issues, but lacks a firm commitment to a Greater Israel.

DIARY ...of a People

Bishop Luigi Carli denounced the Talmud on Nov. 9, 1965, during a meeting of the Vatican Council. It was the latest in a 750-year-old line of church calumnies against Judaism's prime text.

The Talmud is the repository of the Oral Law, the verbal directives and elaborations that according to traditional Judaism were disclosed to Moses on Mt. Sinai to complement the written Torah. While the latter was to spread throughout mankind, the Oral Law specified and clarified the implementation of the mitzvot specifically for the Jewish people. It provided for the mitzvot's evolution and adaptation for all generations, from the Hebrew former slaves in the desert through the arrival of the Messiah.

Scholars first put down principles and illustrations of the Oral Law in writing as the Mishnah (Review) some 2,000 years ago, when political anarchy and social turbulence threatened to disrupt their generation to generation transfer. Further centuries of elaboration on the Mishnah in the academies of the Holy Land and Babylon culminated in two editions of the Talmud. The Babylonian Talmud, composed of some 2.5 million words of halachic and aggadic (lore) discussion, was adopted by Diaspora communities as the undisputed guide for Jewish living.

Meanwhile, the Torah and the Prophets were enthusiastically — and selectively — adopted by Judaism's zealous daughters, Christianity and Islam, and invoked in constant efforts at converting the Jews themselves. The latter's great bulwark proved to be the Talmud, the source of direction from cradle to grave, literacy, intellectual development, pride, uniqueness, and mission.

In 1239, Pope Gregory IX, spurred by the calumnies of apostate Nicholas Donin, condemned the Talmud, and the Jews for "not being content with the old law which God gave to Moses." Five years later, Pope Innocent IV wildly accused the Talmud of containing "blasphemies against God and Christ, and obviously entangled fables about the Blessed Virgin, and abusive errors, and unheard of follies." He was convinced that the Jews could not survive as Jews without their Talmud, "which they feed to their children."

In the wake of the Pope's words were launched actions against the Talmud throughout Christendom. In 1240, Gregory ordered a confiscation of the Talmud and other holy books in France, and instructed Paris's Dominican and Franciscan orders to burn them at the stake. Similar instructions were sent to the kings of France, England, Spain, and Portugal.

Condemned by the inquisition, 24 wagon loads of books were publicly burned in Paris in June, 1242. Similar destructions were carried out through France in the 13th and 14th centuries, and in Rome, and Spain.

The peculiar thaw, in which Christian scholar Johannes Reuchlin was allowed to defend the Talmud against calumnies by apostate Johann Pfefferkorn in 1509, did not last long. Persecution intensified in 16th century Italy, particularly in the papal states. In 1553, on Rosh Hashanah, a massive pyre consumed the Talmuds and seforim of Rome. They were also burned in Bologna, Urbino, Florence, Venice and Cremona. Repeated condemnations of the Talmud were expressed by Gregory XIII and Clement VII. It was included in the first Index Expurgatorius, index of forbidden books, in 1559.

In the fall of 1757, Poland's Bishop Nicholas Dembowski and the followers of apostate Jacob Frank collaborated in the confiscation of nearly 1,000 copies of the Talmud; these were thrown into a pit at Kamenets and burned by the public hangman.

Efforts to physically destroy or suppress Judaism's base continued into the 19th century, to be passionately revived in Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia.

Bishop Carli's statement was anticipated a year earlier by Bishop Ruffini of Sicily, who called the Talmud "a conspiracy against the church." Their words are detailed by Pinchas Lapide in The Last Three Popes and the Jews (1967). He concludes that "ignorance and hatred of the Talmud are still rife in certain church quarters."

The bulwark stands firm as ever, now drawing thousands of baalei teshuvah around the world. Recent steps in Jerusalem by Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz and his followers to bring the Talmud back to Russian Jewry and to revive the Talmud of the Holy Land attest to its strength and promise.

Chernobilskys granted exit visas

By
BELINDA SILBERMAN

The family will likely leave the USSR within two months, said Ben Prossin, director of Canadian Jewish Congress's Ontario Region Soviet Jewry committee.

A roundup of Soviet Jewry news...

Moscow Refusenik Boris Chernobilsky, one of four former Prisoners of Zion still remaining in the Soviet Union, has been granted permission to emigrate, says a spokesman for the National Conference on Soviet Jewry.

Boris, 44, will be allowed to move to Israel, along with his wife, Elena, 41, their three children and son-in-law, Deborah Strober said in a telephone interview from New York.

The Chernobilskys were adopted by Toronto's Beth Tikvah Synagogue earlier this year, after the Khassins, of Moscow, the shul's previous Refusenik family, moved to Israel.

"We're very excited," Stan Solomon, Beth Tikvah's Soviet Jewry chairman, said of the news.

"This was a most difficult case — a long term case — and it looked almost impossible," Solomon said.

"It just shows you should never give up."

The family — including daughters Anna, 17, and Evgenia, 14, and son Josef, 3 — had been denied exit visas since 1975 on grounds that Boris, a former radio engineer, had learned classified information at a job he held until 1974.

Their case was complicated earlier this year when Anna was secretly married by a visiting rabbi to her sweetheart, Alexander Sinichkin, 20.

Soviet officials refused to recognize the marriage, which was not performed according to Soviet law. Sinichkin also lost an opportunity to emigrate on his own when his visa expired earlier than expected on April 4.

But in the latest wave of permissions, Sinichkin will be allowed to join his wife in Israel, Strober said.

Fewer Jewish emigrants from Eastern Europe have gone to Israel since the Palestinian uprising began 10 months ago than in the previous period, according to figures released in Geneva by the Intergovernmental Committee for Migration.

The figures cover only Jews from the Communist block and Middle Eastern countries, not emigrants from Western Europe and North America, stressed Regina Boucault, a spokesman for the Geneva-based committee in a Jewish Telegraphic Agency report.

From January to June this year, 900 Jewish refugees went to Israel, of whom 840 were from the Soviet Union and 60 from other countries.

In 1987, 3,403 Jews settled in Israel, with 1,969 originating from the Soviet Union and 1,434 from other countries.

The committee also gave a breakdown of Jewish emigration from Eastern Europe and Middle Eastern countries during the past 36 years.

Since 1952, 419,329 Jewish refugees have arrived in Israel, 169,953 from the Soviet Union and 249,376 from other countries.

In most cases, less than 250 people a year arrived from the Soviet Union between 1952 and 1969.

But between 1970 and 1980, more than 150,000 Soviet Jews arrived in Israel, with an average of about 15,000 a year.

The arrivals then dropped to only several hundred a year. However, in 1987 the number rose to 1,969 because of new regulations that took effect under Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

The flow of Jewish refugees leaving other Eastern European and Arab countries followed a different pattern, with peak years occurring between 1955 and 1970.

Since then, an average of 1,500 Jews a year have gone to Israel from those countries, the committee reported.

Toronto-area MP Bob Kaplan recently tabled a petition in the House of Commons calling on the Canadian government to make "strong representations" to the Soviet government to grant exit visas to Moscow Refusenik Leonid Shabashov, 42, and his family.

The petition was signed by 1,500 families who are members of Toronto's Beth Emeth-Bais Yehuda Synagogue.

Leonid, a chemical engineer who now teaches math, and his wife, Olga, 44, a speech therapist, have been denied permission to emigrate since 1974 on grounds Leonid possesses state secrets.

The couple has a nine-year-old daughter, Dalia, who suffers from asthma.

The Reagan administration's top human rights specialist has called on the American Jewish community to pay more attention to new immigrants, says a JTA report from Washington.

Richard Schifter, assistant secretary of state for human rights and humanitarian affairs, recently said that with Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union now averaging 2,000 a month, the Jewish community must do more to help new immigrants adjust to their new life.

Moscow Refusenik Gennady Resnikov, an inventor-computer programmer, and his family — adopted by Holy Blossom Temple's senior youth group — have received permission to emigrate, says the shul's new Soviet Jewry chairman.

The youth group adopted the family in June, said Shirley Hanick.

Although the Resnikovs — including wife, Shulamit, and three sons, Sergey, 22, Vladimir, 18, and Michael, 9 — have not yet received exit visas, they have been told they will be able to leave, Hanick said.

As part of the shul's recent Simchat Torah program, youth group members carried candles, Torahs and pictures of the Resnikov family and the shul's adopted Lurie family, of Moscow, into a darkened sanctuary.

Speakers included youth group members Laura Jacob, 16, and Jonathan Wasserman, 15, Anne Moorehouse, a member of the Soviet Jewry committee, and the shul's assistant rabbi, David Azen. The four visited Moscow and Leningrad for 12 days earlier this year.

The shul plans to hold a major campaign in January to publicize the plight of the Luries. For more information, call Hanick at (416) 781-7858.

Kristallnacht lessons have currency today

Former U.S. ambassador to Austria, Ronald S. Lauder, has struck the right chord in his recent references to two solemn anniversaries which Jews are observing during this season.

Three months after the fateful Evian conference of July 6-14, 1938, Germany unleashed its savage Kristallnacht pogroms. The two incidents were not unrelated.

It was at that lovely French resort town that 32 nations unanimously rejected the Biblical injunction to be the keeper of one's brother as they declared one by one their refusal to accept Jewish immigration.

Says ambassador Lauder: "Both Nazi and Jew looked at Evian and got the same message: No one cared. Now the Nazis had the free world's signature on a licence to do what they wished with an abandoned people."

Within weeks that abandoned people was subjected to an outbreak of Nazi brutality in Germany that was a hint of the terror that would engulf European Jewry in the Holocaust.

It was on that November day half a century ago that the leaders of the German Reich ordered the synagogues to be burned, Jewish places of worship desecrated, Jewish shops and homes plundered and Jewish citizens mistreated, abducted or murdered.

It is encouraging to note that 50 years after these horrendous events various groups in Germany itself are taking note of this anniversary year. The German Evangelical Church, for example, has condemned "historic Christian guilt for the persecution of the Jews and its support, indifference or 'fearful silence' in the face of atrocities."

The church's public statement emphasized the fact that Kristallnacht occurred in full view of everyone. Those who planned the outrage counted on the acquiescence or indifference of the population in the persecution of Jews.

The best way for Jews and Gentiles to commemorate Kristallnacht today is to behave toward all people as we wish the world had behaved toward the Jews of Europe 50 years ago.

Paucity of comment on the handicapped

The recent decision by the Supreme Court of Canada affirming the right of mentally handicapped people to participate in the electoral process is one that will undoubtedly spark some vigorous debate.

The decision rendered by the court, however, raises an issue that has only been partially addressed by Jewish constituencies within Canada, namely the obligations of the organized community towards the mentally handicapped.

This is a subject which, unfortunately, has not, until recent years, been the focus of Jewish energies, either on the theoretical or practical level. It is instructive to note that the Encyclopedia Judaica, that vast compendium of Jewish law and lore, does not contain a single entry on mental retardation or handicaps.

It is also to be noted that the small library of Jewish guides and manuals that are available today, from Donin's To Be A Jew to Kolatch's The Jewish Book Of Why, take not notice of Judaism's response to the mentally handicapped. There is a similar paucity of comment in current journals devoted to Jewish thought.

In the last several years, however, Jews in some of the larger metropolitan centres in the United States and Canada have been trying to service the special needs of the Jewish mentally handicapped. There are now more than a dozen summer camps in the states of New York, Illinois and New Jersey and in the province of Ontario which provide special programming for those who want to be involved in the life of mitzvot at a level which they can accommodate.

In the urban centres, however, the mentally handicapped within the Jewish community rarely come into contact with the organized synagogue and social facilities.

There is one happy exception to this phenomenon. Toronto's Beth Tzedec Synagogue has, for years, been hosting a contingent of mentally handicapped young Jewish men and women in the synagogue's main sanctuary Shabbat services. The gesture is an important one because it confirms the compassion which lies at the heart of the Jewish faith.

El Salvador trip scuttled

THE JEWISH WORLD

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Like much of the rest of Central America, El Salvador is gripped by social and political unrest. The civil war that has wracked Central America's most crowded nation is in a relatively dormant state, but it could easily flare up again.

In El Salvador, where appalling poverty and wildly uneven income distribution patterns are the norm, the spectre of revolution looms large. The tiny Jewish community, which is overwhelmingly middle and upper class, more or less identifies with the ruling classes. Jews, therefore, would be vulnerable if the conservative regime there were overthrown and replaced by a Marxist government.

Throughout the 7-nation isthmus, Jews are still haunted by the 1979 Sandinista takeover in Nicaragua, which led to the downfall of the U.S.-backed dictatorship of Gen. Anastasio Somoza Debayle, and resulted in the emigration of the numerically insignificant Nicaraguan Jewish community.

These facts must be borne in mind to understand the recent cancellation of a trip to El Salvador by the Union of American Hebrew Congregations' Religion Action Centre (RAC). RAC's decision to cancel it speaks volumes about the position of Jews in El Salvador particularly and of Jews in Central America generally.

The Union of American Hebrew Congregations (UAHC), the organizational umbrella group of the Reform movement, has been opposed to U.S. military aid to El Salvador as well as to the contras in Nicaragua. UAHC spokesmen have also testified in support of congressional legislation to halt deportations of El Salvadoran refugees who have found sanctuary in the U.S., according to the Washington Jewish Week.

In light of its involvement in these problems, RAC planned a fact-finding tour of El Salvador scheduled to have taken place in the summer. Glenn Stein, the organizer of the trip, said its purpose was several-fold: to show "concern and support" for El Salvadoran refugees who reportedly have been forced out of their homes by the government; to discuss the general situation in the country with politicians of all shades, church leaders and U.S. embassy officials; to hold Shabbat services with the local Jewish community, which has dwindled to some 200 persons.

The trip proved to be still-born. Central American Jewish leaders, fearing RAC would embarrass their respective communities, visited the U.S. and exerted enough pressure on UAHC to cancel the whole thing.

Coordinated by the National Jewish Coalition, a Washington organization with close ties to the Republican Party, the Central American leaders' visit was therefore a success.

The delegation consisted of Jean-Claude Kahn and Raquel Leibes of El Salvador, Moses Mizrachi of Panama, Edgar Heinemann and Roberto Stein of Guatemala and Gilberto Goldstein of Honduras.

They met with Reagan administration officials, the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations and the Washington Board of Rabbis. They reportedly told their interlocutors that a trip by an American Jewish group critical of El Salvador's policies would place the Jews of El Salvador in a precarious position.

Communist revolutions spur fear

In a letter to Morris Abram, chairman of the Presidents Conference, Kahn is said to have written that RAC's trip was "politically motivated." As he put it: "Such a trip with an obvious predisposed anti-government approach would present difficulties for the Jews of El Salvador with various groups, including the private enterprise sector of which we are an integral part. We (Jews) wish to remain in El Salvador and contribute to the economic development of the country. We are encouraged by El Salvador's move toward democracy and increasing respect for human rights."

UAHC agreed to scuttle the trip because, according to Glenn Stein, "the Jews are scared in El Salvador and we couldn't see putting ourselves against their concerns. We realize the trip would put them in a difficult position."

What frightens Jews in El Salvador and elsewhere in Central America is the fear of "Communist revolutions" that, they claim, would weaken their nations' strong ties with Israel and unleash latent anti-semitic sentiments among the largely destitute and illiterate populations. Since nearly all Jews are in business, they would be "the primary target of any Communist movement," Moses Mizrachi warns. "We're in the middle because we're the store owners," he told The Jewish Week of New York.

"The Jewish community is in the eye of the storm all the time." Roberto Stein put it more dramatically: "The Jewish communities in Latin America cannot survive under a Communist government."

If Nicaragua is taken as an example, the vulnerability of Central America's estimated 8,000 Jews is not open to doubt. After the Sandinista revolution, the local community, some of whose leaders had been close to the Somoza clique, disintegrated. Managua's only synagogue, then all but abandoned, was seized and converted into a youth centre. Later, the government offered to return the synagogue to community control. The offer has yet to be accepted by Nicaraguan Jewish exiles in Miami. In foreign affairs, Nicaragua — which had voted for the 1947 United Nations Palestine partition plan — turned against Israel and embraced the PLO. Israel, until almost the last moment, supported Somoza against the rebels.

What happened in Nicaragua can theoretically happen in El Salvador or Guatemala: However, according to critics, the region's affluent Jews are using the issue of potential anti-semitism as a smokescreen to conceal a de facto alliance with repressive right-wing regimes that protect their business interests.

In the sharply polarized societies of Central America, they add, virtually all opposition to ruling juntas or their capitalistic allies is condemned as Communism.

Marshall Meyer, a Reform rabbi who served for 25 years in Argentina, claims that many Central American Jews "are worried because they'll lose their fortunes" under a leftist regime. Meyer charges that regional Jewish leaders have been less critical of their own government's often massive human rights violations than of possible threats from left-wing opponents.

Critics such as Meyer argue that the Reagan administration has tried cynically to exploit Jewish fears of revolution to further its own policy ends in Latin America.

Annette Jaffe, co-director of New Jewish Agenda, said that the recent study tour by Central American leaders was partly a ploy by the Republican-linked National Jewish Coalition to build Jewish support for Reagan administration action in Nicaragua.

Clearly, Central American Jews have nightmares of living under a Communist dictatorship. But these fears are being exploited for crass political purposes by the Reagan administration and its Jewish supporters in Washington.

Last month, the Central American Jewish leaders were in the U.S. again, and this time their message was that the survival of democracy in that volatile region is essential to the survival of their tiny communities.

When one attempts to point out certain harsh realities to supporters of the Gush Emunim settlers in the territories, they ultimately invoke the idea of some form of future Divine intervention. Would you comment on Gush Emunim's ideas.

The fault of the Gush is that it has not learned — as it should have from the Holocaust — that one cannot count on miracles. Messianic politics can lead to catastrophe as it did in Bar Kochba's time.

Whether the Likud is morally wrong rather than, possibly, politically imprudent in seeming to oppose territorial compromises is quite another question best answered when Yitzhak Rabin of Labor stated that he, too, would oppose territorial compromises — if Israel had several more million Jews!

To (translate) this for Canadians, Israel could then aim at being a democracy like Canada, a country that took its own good time before getting a flag and national anthem acceptable to all. But alas, six million Jews were murdered — and Western Jews are not coming. The gut reaction of Western Jews to the (Palestinian) uprising should have been for 100,000 to make aliya at once.

Instead, it seems, they won't even visit anymore, and a great many have become vocal in criticizing this or that policy of the hard-pressed Israeli government (without stating that) the uprising is a new, more dangerous stage in an Arab war aimed at Israel's destruction.

In a rare moment of honesty, a PLO spokesman said at last they had found the way (to destroy Israel): The uprising would divide Israel and Diaspora; divide Israelis into hawks and doves, and, best of all, discredit Israel in the eyes of ignorant, TV-watching one-time friends.

Is there hope for peace? There is. Every day one meets Arabs who want to live as respected citizens in Israel or as peaceful neighbors next door. But they do not yet stand up and be counted politically for fear of being assassinated. So long as this is the case our slogan should be, not "security through peace" but rather "peace through security."

The most admirable fact about Israel is to have held out so long as under an ongoing siege — more decently than would have any of the states that are now busy bashing her.

You have said of anti-semitism that first there is the word and then there is the deed. The high court in Alberta declared the law under which Jim Keegstra was convicted as a violation of the constitution (the decision has since been appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada). Are Jews justified in seeking laws against the propagation of hatred including Holocaust denial?

Emil Fackenheim

happening, they were only obeying orders, etcetera. It is as if their lack of "consistency" and cowardice does not match the enormity of their deeds. What can you say about this?

Lack of consistency and cowardice don't suffice to explain why every Nazi criminal, from the Nuremberg ones down, has pleaded innocent. The Holocaust was a unique world of evil in which everyone did his share just as in a normal world. So unique was what I call the anti-world par excellence that to this day even good people change the subject whenever (the Holocaust) comes up (talking about) Vietnam, Cambodia, Arab refugees, American indifference...you name it.

While the war was on, they said, "Don't bother us, there's a war on." When it was over, they said, "Don't bother us, the war is over." By all means, let us discuss Vietnam, Hiroshima, Cambodia and all the other ills of our world. But if and when Auschwitz is discussed, let there be no change of the subject. Until this is done, the shadow of Hitler will haunt the world, with nice people defending Keegstra's right to say the Holocaust never happened.

Jews have been persecuted by the triumphalist church and now Israel faces similar difficulties with Islam. Is Arab-Israeli peace really possible before the development and survival of a liberal Moslem theology in the Arab world?

A parallel does exist between a triumphalist church and a triumphalist mosque, although there is also a difference. The church has denied Jewish Christ-killers the right to exist, allowing them existence only by divine (and ecclesiastical) charity. Islam (which did not have the Jewish Christ-killer myth until it imported it just when Christians were beginning to be ashamed of it) has taught that Jews may exist — as tolerees in Moslem states. Hence, Arab leaders claim to be only "anti-Zionist" but not "anti-semitic." Both claims are mendacious for part of Judaism is hope for a restored state in the ancient land, and "anti-semitism" never was anything except a code word for Jew-hatred.

That theological liberalization is not enough is proved by the "liberal" PLO National Covenant which contains not a theological word, yet (its intent) that Jews can only be tolerees in a Moslem — now "democratic Arab" — state is entirely unchanged. What is needed is not liberalization but rather a fundamental repentance by the Moslem daughter of Judaism of its original sin — teaching contempt of the Jewish mother.

That for the other daughter, Christianity, liberalization is not enough either is shown by the Catholic theologian Rosemary Ruether. Her Faith and Fratricide asks whether Christians can say "Jesus is Christ" without adding "and the Jews be damned." Her subsequent Israel-bashing proves that in her "liberalizing" answer, Jesus is Christ only relatively and that Jews are damned relatively. Needed is a fundamental repentance, which could cut across orthodox-liberal divisions in both Christianity and Islam.

You have now lived in Israel for a number of years. Do you become frustrated with the flaws in the country's public life?

Following on the heels of the Holocaust, Israel is the most heroic Jewish accomplishment since the days of Bar Kochba. Compared to this, its failings pale.

Someone once asked an Englishman, how his countrymen had such beautiful lawns. "Easy," replied the Englishman. "Just cut and water the grass, and do it for 600 years."

Israel won't have that many years. But give her 50, and let 100,000 Jews come from the West to help cut and water the grass — and do it, as no Englishman ever had to, while enduring a siege of enemies whose stubbornness, we must hope, is less enduring than ours.

Nazis created evil world par excellence

When people deny the Holocaust they (are proclaiming): What a Jewish conspiracy is that "myth of the six million!" (The deniers) not only shout fire (in a crowded theatre), they are stoking the fire for the next Holocaust, this time presumably in Israel.

The only excuse for the Alberta court is that it doesn't really believe that the Holocaust happened—or in any case has no idea of what it was.

When brought to trial, perpetrators of the Holocaust, including John Demjanjuk, do not cite their hideous ideology. Instead, they claim they weren't there, they didn't know what was

No ifs, ands or buts

Don't yawn at abuse problem

By ELAINE KAHN

I was getting all weepy during a recent sermon on the importance of appreciating one's blessings, when something went wrong.

The sermon contained a touching poem by a woman who kept putting off properly appreciating her boy friend — then he went off to war and died.

"There were so many things I wanted to make up to you after you returned from the war — but you didn't," wrote the poet.

Every verse ended "but you didn't." Including "I forgot to tell you that the dance was formal, and you showed up in jeans — I thought you'd smack me . . ."

This, I'm afraid, is where the rabbi lost me — at least until after we put the kids to bed and could discuss it.

Sure, maybe social sensitivity can go too far. I mean, if we worry in every single sentence we utter about not being sexist, racist, ageist or classist, ban smoking, drinking, drugs and sex from our speech and make sure we don't insult the disabled, natives, labor or management, we could end up simply grunting at each other — until someone decides to ban that as impolite.

But talking about being smacked, within days of the Kirby Inwood wife and child abuse trial, this does kind of jump out at a person.

What I worry about with the Inwood case is that I'm boring you, that it has become another 1-day wonder.

At a UJA meeting several years ago, Chaviva Hosek, then head of NAC, said at least one out of every 10 women is abused, and that she was including the Jewish audience before her, some 500 strong. A nervous giggle swept the room.

In the last few days I have sat down to think of the women, men and children I personally know whom I know have abused, or been abused by, parents or spouses. Without even trying, I could think of about a dozen, mainly Jewish.

Increasingly, I learn from my daughters, who, bless them, choose to watch the news on TV every night. For them, the Inwood case was cut and dried: it is a horrible thing for a man to beat his wife and child and they literally cheered the likelihood of a Crown appeal of Inwood's 30-day sentence.

Not for them the ifs, ands or buts of adult sexual politics and legal niceties. For them, it was simply evil. They are lucky enough to belong to a family, nuclear and extended, in which they can know that so unreservedly.

What I cannot explain to them is why some adults should see it differently. Why there are adult gradations of something that should be a fact. I can't even explain to them, for that matter, why the occasional spankings they got as toddlers were not child abuse. They get me feeling guilty enough to wonder about it.

From my limited direct experience with abuse cases, I know that everything I have read about the failures of The System to help victims, quickly and cleanly, is true. If I were counting my own blessings today, one near the top would be that I have no need for that system.

But others do. Not all our elderly are in their own homes or under caring professional care — some are in the care of their children and some of those children beat them. We have mothers and fathers who beat up their children. We beat up the disabled. Men beat wives and wives, fewer but no less vicious, beat husbands.

Just because it hasn't happened to you yet doesn't give you the right to be yawning.

Anton Shammas' Hebrew novel a search for identity

By
SHELDON KIRSHNER

TORONTO —

In 1962, when he was 12 years old, Anton Shammas — a Christian Israeli Arab from the Upper Galilee village of Fassuta — went into a grocery store in Haifa to buy sunflower seeds.

By the time he walked out of that shop, Shammmas' life had been altered, although he did not realize it then. What should have been a mundane, eminently forgettable transaction turned out to be, in retrospect, an event of immense personal proportions.

After asking for the seeds, Shammas got an unexpected reply from the shopkeeper, a Jew. Im melakh, o bli melakh? (with or without salt). Shammas' knowledge of Hebrew was such that he did not understand his question, and repeated his request. The response was exactly the same. Like most Israeli Arabs of that era, Shammas was barely literate in Hebrew.

At that moment, an Arab girl, a neighbor's daughter who had witnessed the awkward exchange and whose Hebrew was better than Shammas', broke into the laughter.

The shopkeeper laughed, too.

"I did not laugh," he recalled in an interview. "I shook with anger. I was utterly humilated. I took my seeds, without salt. And I walked home, vowing I would one day know Hebrew better than either of them."

Shammas, a poet, writer, freelance journalist, translator and former producer of Arabic programs for Israeli television, has kept his promise.

With a vengeance.

Two years ago, the boy from Fassuta finished his first novel, Arabesques, which became a bestseller in Israel and has since been translated into English, French, Italian and German. What is so special about Arabesques is that it was written in a language Shammas once struggled with — Hebrew.

"Something momentous has happened in Hebrew literature," wrote critic Yael Lotan after its publication. "Even before discussing this book itself and its literary merits, one cannot avoid discussing, firstly and primarily, the fact that an Israeli Arab has broken into Hebrew literature. Moreover, he has achieved this not from the side, but rather through the front door, the main entrance of literature, with a big, solid and rich novel which is entirely based on Israeli experience."

Arabesques, which The New York Times has called an "impressively beautiful piece of prose," is narrated by a 4th-generation Israeli Arab who describes 150 years in the annals of the Shammas clan in Fassuta.

On his father's side, the first Shammas arrived in Palestine from Syria early in the 19th century. Shammas' mother, a French teacher, came to Fassuta from Beirut in 1936, later marrying his father, Hanna, a barber and cobbler.

Fassuta, which fell into Jewish hands during the 1948 Arab-Israeli war, arose on the ruins of a Crusader castle, which itself had been built over Mifshata, a Jewish village that had been settled after the destruction of the Second Temple in 70 AD.

Shammas, the author of two books of Hebrew poetry and one book of Arabic poetry, intended Arabesques to be in Hebrew, his second language. Although he wrote the first chapter in Arabic, he soon realized it had to be in Hebrew.

With Hebrew, he could achieve a certain distance. The stories and fables which suffuse the novel were told to him by his relatives, particularly his Uncle Yusef, and Shammas did not want them to " breathe down my back."

And Shammas, 38, wished to tell his story to a specifically Jewish audience, although 70% of Israeli Arabs can read Hebrew. "My people know the story, and there was no point repeating it to them."

"Jews know little about their Arab neighbors," he added. "And under ordinary circumstances, they would not make an attempt to find out. So here comes someone along who writes about it all in Hebrew."

Shammas started to grapple with Hebrew, in Fassuta, at the age of 9. When he was 12, he and his family moved to Haifa. They lived near the waterfront, in an all-Arab neighborhood he hated. Shammas attended a mixed Arab-Jewish school.

After his embarrassing encounter with the Jewish shopkeeper, Shammas redoubled his efforts to master Hebrew. "I wanted to penetrate it, to know the language of my surroundings."

By 18 or 19, he was completely fluent in Hebrew, and at the urging of a sympathetic and perceptive teacher, Nira Mazourik, wrote his bagrut essay in Hebrew, on the image of the Palestinian peasant (felah) in pre-1948 Hebrew literature.

In 1968, Shammas left Haifa for good when he enrolled at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. He studied English literature and art, being one of only about 600 Israeli Arabs attending college at the time. He liked Jerusalem — the libraries, the bookshops, the cafes — but he never received his degree. Nevertheless, he launched a career there as a poet and translator.

In his first year at the Hebrew University, one of his Hebrew poems was printed in Haaretz. In 1974, he published his first book of poetry.

He wrote his poems in Hebrew because he thinks his poetry — "call it modernist" — would have been rejected by Arab publishers in Israel. "After 1948, Arab culture in Israel was cut off from the rest of the Arab world. And so Arab literature was village literature, old-fashioned. I wanted to be new."

By the mid-1970s, Shammas was growing tired of poetry. "It's an inaccurate genre, because it depends on the charity of readers," he said.

When he began writing Arabesques, Shammas discovered he was not quite equal to the task. "I was too young." He placed the manuscript into a drawer, returning to it about five years ago.

Jews reading Arabesques revelled in his ornate Hebrew, with its strands of history, myth and bursts of self-consciousness. But Arab readers found it tough going. "My Hebrew, for an Arab, is difficult, what with its long, winding sentences and biblical and Talmudic allusions. In Arabesques, I tried to 'unJew' Hebrew — to make it more semitic and bring it back to its origins in the Orient."

Shammas, who says he dreams both in Hebrew and Arabic, was trying to make something of a political statement in his novel.

In his effort to straddle the Jewish and Arab worlds in Israel, Shammas has evolved a theory of nationality resting on a rejection of Israel's Law of Return, which confers automatic citizenship on any Jew in the world, provided he or she is not a criminal.

Shammas believes that the Law of Return, in effect, is racist because it effectively defines Israel as the homeland of the Jewish people rather than of its variegated citizens, 17% of whom are Moslems or Christians.

"The fact is that there are no Israelis in Israel for the simple reason that the rubric 'nationality' on Israeli identity cards reads either 'Jew' or 'Arab.' The term 'Israeli nationality' does not exist in any Israeli official document, and it is used only by the Israeli Jews because Israel, as defined by its laws, is 'the state of the Jewish people' and not the state of its citizens.'

"The Law of Return is still considered by nearly all Jewish Israelis to be the backbone, the raison d'etre, of the Jewish state. It means, among other things, that the State of Israel cannot choose its citizens according to a particular immigration law, as is the case in most democratic countries of the Western world, but, rather, the citizen (the strictly Jewish one) is the one who makes the choice. You, as a Canadian, have more rights in Israel than I do."

Arabesques gives Jews unique look at Arab neighbor

Yet Arabesques is more than a chronicle cum-fable of Palestinian society in microcosm in Fassuta. It is Shammas' own search for identity in a Jewish state. "What I had in mind with Arabesques is my identity card," explained Shammas, who was in Toronto to attend the annual International Festival of Authors. "In Israel, on your actual identity card, there is a space for nationality, and in this space you are Arab or Jew. With my novel, I was trying to prove — to myself as much as to anyone else — that there is something which I think of as Israeli, which is not a matter of Arab or Jew, but a matter of living in a place called Israel."

Expresses reservations over law

On a personal level, Shammas has no problems with his identity. "First and foremost, I'm a Palestinian — the most Israeli Palestinian I know. Then I'm a citizen. I'm willing to call myself an Israeli if the state is willing to do so."

While he has grave reservations about the Law of Return, Shammas does not believe that Zionism is racialistic. "It's an ideological and national liberation movement. The Law of Return isn't Zionism. It limits Zionism."

Shammas, who is currently a visiting fellow at the University of Michigan's Center for Near Eastern Studies, holds that Israeli Arabs are second-class citizens because they are not accorded full political rights. "The Prime Minister of Israel, for example, can't be a non-Jew."

And Israeli Arabs lack complete social rights — equal employment opportunities, equal budgets for municipal councils, and so on.

Shammas' vision of Israel is that of a democratic, secular state, in the Canadian sense of the meaning. "This is what I'm fighting for. It's inevitable. But Israel can't change itself as long as the (Arab-Israeli) conflict remains unsolved."

Like virtually all Israeli Arabs, he supports the notion of a West Bank-Gaza Strip Palestinian state. But he maintains that such an entity must be secular and democratic in character.

He's optimistic that Jews, Moslems and Christians will live in peace one day. "If not today or tomorrow, some time in the future. Somebody will have to face the music."

Interestingly enough, Arabesques has yet to be translated into Arabic, although reaction to it in the Arab world has not been negative. "That's not the kind of a reaction it would have gotten 10 or 15 years ago." Young Israeli Arabs who've read it, he said, are "filled with pride" that an Arab could have written such an accomplished novel in Hebrew.

Asked if it will be translated into Arabic, Shammas smiled. "I don't have the time to do it, and no one else can. If I ever translate it, I'll have to change its tone, mood, syntax and structure."

So for now, Arabesques remains what its author intended it to be — a distinctly Palestinian cum-Israeli novel, in Hebrew.

J. B. SALSBERG

Being a very integral part of the world-wide Jewish community and living at a time when that global community is faced with awesome problems and challenges it would not be surprising if very important dates of great local significance would be overlooked or noted only in a passing manner. But such oversights should not, in my view, be tolerated. For, in the final analysis, a Jewish community is as strong as are the components that form it and that give expression to what we call "Jewish values" and a "Jewish way of life."

J. B. Salsberg

That the Toronto Jewish community is considered by the world-wide Jewish family as an exemplary one is not surprising. For, with all its shortcomings, Jewish Toronto merits more than average favorable recognition.

But it isn't my intention to sit in the undeserved position of judge or dispenser of credits. I do believe though that the Toronto Jewish Congress, the central body of Metropolitan Toronto's Jewish community should be the dispenser of such public honors to deserving Jewish institutions in our midst on special anniversaries.

What I do desire to do at present is to focus our community's attention on the 70th anniversary of one of our most important institutions: Baycrest, the all-embracing name of a conglomerate of institutions and buildings that form a community that is dedicated to serve the aging and the aged of our area.

As such, it has gained the well-deserved reputation as a vanguard in the ongoing process of transforming "old age homes" from "last stop" homes into centres for the extension of human vibrancy and creativity for our mature, senior citizens. To help them retain a lively involvement in every activity of the Jewish community and in the concerns and efforts of public inportance to the city and country as a whole.

In short, Baycrest extends life and, as far as possible, tries to make life for its residents and its non-resident groups of seniors as stimulating as possible.

When I think of the founding of the "Moishev Zekeinim," the "Toronto Jewish Old Folks Home" on Cecil St. in 1918 (the street where my family lived) and try to compare it with the Baycrest complex of today I feel as if transplanted unto another planet.

The first residents there entered to finish their days in as much physical shelter and comfort as possible.

I recall when one of the Home's early residents, who was still very alert physically and mentally, would spend all his in-between-meals time on Spadina Av. He favored a thimble-full or two of "shnaps" before meals. But the "rules" of the Home forbade such practices. However, since my family knew the man well, our home became the hiding place for his forbidden beverage. He would regularly "drop in" to our house to down a sip or two from the forbidden bottle before mealtime.

Even I, privileged to serve on a few Baycrest committees, am frequently amazed by the extent of Baycrest's empire. For instance:

There is, The Jewish Home for the Aged; Baycrest Hospital; Baycrest Day Care Service; Baycrest Terrace and the Wagman Centre. At this moment there is an urgent need for a new building so as to reduce the long and painful waiting periods for applicants who have been approved for admission but for whom there is no place (except the hospital, of course) in the areas to which they have been designated by the social work and medical staff of the home.

We need the new addition to accommodate the waiting applicants. But such an addition would require millions of dollars. Where is the money to come from, when even governments have declared a moratorium on new projects in the city, the province and the country as a whole? 'Siz bitter . . .

Do you know that in order to maintain Baycrest's high standards that institution operates on a big deficit? It is estimated that this year the deficit may reach over 7½ million dollars!

So, how do they make ends meet? They don't. The officers and two special groups (the men's service group and the women's auxiliary) are not only most dedicated "money raisers" but geniuses at their tasks. But they raise only half a million yearly between them.

I often sit in reverent awe at their meetings. That they will be blessed with eternal life is, in my mind, a certainty. What a collective of concerned and dedicated folksmenshen they are!

Yes, yes; and what of the army of men and women volunteers without whom the successful operation of Baycrest is inconceivable? They are our unsung heroes who deserve to be praised in all the streets and in all the tents of Israel in our city. They too are assured of honored places in Gan Eiden. (But a little praise right here and now wouldn't hurt.) As for the staff? I haven't seen a more dedicated group of professionals.

And as they say in conclusion:

Baycrest is one of the finest jewels in the possession of the Toronto Jewish community. On its 70th birthday we should join hands and sing lustily; Happy Birthday, Baycrest! We pledge to continue our support, support that you earned and richly deserve!

HE WON'T SHUT UP

In her recent letter to The CJN, Naomi Frankenberg condemns Diaspora Jews who criticize Israel and advises them to go live there after voicing their criticism.

While Mrs. Frankenberg may be eminently qualified to head Canadian Hadassah-WIZO, I really doubt that these attributes qualify her to lecture Diaspora Jews about what they should or should not say.

What she is, in effect, saying is: "Contribute to Israel causes. Visit Israel. But bite your tongue and keep your mouth shut if you disagree with Israeli policies."

If I, as a democrat and a Jew, want the Soviet Union to release thousands of Russian Jews, must I move to Russia before doing so? Or can I protest while living in Canada?

If I strongly object to Gen. Pinochet's repressive tactics in Chile, President Botha's apartheid policies in South Africa, or Ortega's anti-democratic measures in Nicaragua, must I first emigrate to those countries before voicing my opinions?

"Ah," Mrs. Frankenberg will say, "but Israel is different. Israel is a gift of God." (Whatever that means.)

Canadian Hadassah-WIZO does a great job on behalf of Israel. However, its present leadership should not assume the role of judge and jury, and pontificate on what those Zionists who happen to disagree with her views should or should not say.

HE BLASTS RABBI'S BLAST

Re your Oct. 13 article headed "Marmur blasts Orthodox group's call to arms" and subheaded "Vows to continue fight for Jewish pluralism":

Rabbi Marmur's complaints against the Orthodox are entirely unjustified.

The Orthodox are fully entitled to deny use of their mikvah premises to Baptists or minim (heretics, according to Orthodox theology) i.e. communicants of Reform, Humanist, Reconstructionist or Jewish Science perceptions of Judaism.

Those of us in the authentic tradition of Reform ("Liberal" in England) Judaism accept Orthodox consistencies.

We neither solicit Orthodox approval of our consistent Reform practices, nor do we cater to Orthodox recognition of Reform rabbinical ordinations.

The Union of Orthodox Rabbis is free to issue a "call to arms" against Reform Judaism. Let the Reform rabbis provide a choice, not an echo, by imitating Orthodox practices of kashrut, mikvah, yarmulkes and tallises.

RABBI'S ATTACK OFFENDS HIM

I am not surprised by the Sept. 22 letter of Rabbi J. Immanuel Schochet headed "Rabbi hits rabbi's 'humility' " which criticizes my address to the International Council of Christians and Jews annual colloquium.

Nor am I surprised that he falsified my words, placing quotation marks around phrases that allegedly exist in your original Sept. 1 article covering the colloquium proceedings (headed "Interfaith dialogue requires humility, forum told").

Nor am I surprised at the spurious and offensive accusations he levels at me as being willing to serve in the sanctuaries of another faith, and promoting intermarriage and conversion out of Judaism.

Rabbi Schochet did not attend the colloquium, nor has he asked for a complete text of my remarks. He did not carefully read the report in your paper.

Instead, the brief summary in your report of my 4,000-word address became the basis of his attack.

His letter bears no resemblance at all to your report, nor to anything that I have said, written or thought.

I am, however, most surprised that The CJN permitted the printing of this obviously inflammatory and defamatory letter without observing three elementary journalistic courtesies.

Firstly, you did not contact me for my response before you printed his letter.

Second, you did not check the accuracy of the letter against your own story.

Finally, your reporter had a complete text of my address which could have been, but was not, consulted before publishing the letter.

I have no objection to serious discussion of my essay and point of view in The Canadian Jewish News or elsewhere. You must decide if it is the mandate of The CJN to be an open community forum, in which views may be respectfully presented or a platform for slander.

Published letters should have as their goal the promotion of meaningful discussion and not be permitted when they are abusive.

I hold you as equally responsible as Schochet for propagating, without verification, the distortions that you printed.

HEAVY NOSHER NOT FATSO

I am currently reading Frank Rasky's book about Murray Koffler, Just A Simple Pharmacist, and find it most interesting.

However, I was simply furious when I read his Oct. 6 article in The CJN headed "Koffler clan's King Ranch ultimate in healthy relaxation."

In it he refers to my husband, Mel Zuckerman, founder of the Canyon Ranch Health and Fitness Resort in Tucson, Ariz., as "a former heavy-drinking, heavy-smoking, heavy-eating real estate executive, who had converted a run-down dude ranch into its present streamlined opulence."

I am here to tell you that Mel was never a drinker, or a smoker, or even a "heavy" eater. The most he was — was a heavy "nosher." Hopefully, you will clarify this.

Enid Zuckerman
Tucson, Arizona

Frank Rasky replies: Happy to oblige. Direct your fury not at me, but at Anne Harding. She is author of the book, Resort to Fitness, and consultant to the Koffler family's $38 million King Ranch, Canada's first international health spa, which will open next October in King Township near Toronto. She passed along all that "heavy" misinformation about your husband in a tape-recorded interview I had with her during the recent cornerstone-laying of the King Ranch. By the way, your husband, who was present at that ceremony, looked to me, as the saying goes, as slim as a sylph and fit as a fiddle — obviously no longer a heavy nosher.

However, there was an error in the labeling of the photo, which was captioned "Dobrish Pincu": it is not. It is a photo of Dobrish Pincu's daughter, Mrs. Sally Hecker who lives in Toronto, and has been Canadian for more than 60 years. Can you print a correction?

LA PRESSE IS "ANTI-ISRAEL"

Re the recent articles by Janice Arnold on Monreal's La Presse and that newspaper's attitude toward the chassidim of Montreal's Outremont:

Allegedly, La Presse is not known for being pro-Arab. Yet on Aug. 27 it published a 2-page so-called expose by its Jerusalem correspondent, Jooned Khan, which is the most anti-Israel article I have seen in any major North American daily newspaper on the Palestinian riots.

The headline read: "The refusal to flee before the terror." And it claimed that the Israeli government has clamped the "iron fist" down on East Jerusalem, where it has "abandoned all pretence of respecting Israeli law."

Documentary on Klaus Barbie

Hotel Terminus is a tale of unmitigated evil

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

TORONTO —

There probably will never be as exhaustive a documentary about German war criminal Klaus Barbie as Marcel Ophuls' Hotel Terminus: The Life and Times of Klaus Barbie.

At 4 hours and 27 minutes, Ophuls' magum opus was culled from more than 120 hours of film. Best known for The Sorrow and the Pity, a controversial expose of French collaboration with Nazi Germany, Ophuls spent five years on Barbie's serpentine trail, interviewing almost 100 people on three continents, including Barbie's victims and friends.

The portrait that emerges of Barbie — the head of the Gestapo in Lyon — is that of a sly, ruthless, efficient interrogator and torturer who drew on the assistance of French traitors cum-collaborators to achieve his goals.

Not ignored is the fact that Barbie managed to escape his fate, at least until 1983, thanks to the complicity of certain Western powers, namely the U.S.

But Barbie, now in prison for life after being convicted of crimes against humanity, could not have resisted arrest all these years without the assistance of friends in high places in Bolivia, where he lived for many years after the war, primarily as a shady businessman engaged in illegal currency transactions and the drug and arms trade.

Responsible for ordering the deaths of some 4,000 people, torturing and killing resistance leader Jean Moulin and deporting 7,000 French Jews between 1942 and 1944, Barbie is recalled as an unrepentant Nazi and an anti-semite.

Born in Bad Godesberg in 1913, Barbie joined the security service of the SS in 1935, and became a member of the Nazi Party two years later. In 1942, he was assigned to Lyon, where he worked out of the Hotel Terminus. Utterly dedicated to the task at hand, he was praised by Heinrich Himmler, his superior, for "outstanding achievements in the criminal police and unstinting commitment in the fight against the resistance."

Within two years of Germany's surrender, Barbie had been recruited by the Counter Intelligence Corps (CIC) of the U.S. army to investigate Communist activities in Germany under American control. The CIC protected Barbie during the so-called de-Nazification period. In 1951, he and his family made their way to South America, carrying a passport issued by the Allied High Commission in Munich. Travelling on the Vatican Route under the assumed name of Klaus Altmann, he reached Bolivia, where he established himself as a less than honest businessman, security advisor to local coup-prone governments and leading light in the expatriate German community.

Marcel Ophuls

In Hotel Terminus, now playing at Cineplex Odeon theatres, Barbie is shown to have been a man of charm, kindness and consideration, provided you were not a Jew or his enemy. Ophuls, who occupies a central role in the film as narrator, interviewer and commentator, does not pretend to be objective.

Exhibiting keen intelligence and understated flashes of wit, scorn and sarcasm, Ophuls is deeply involved in the proceedings, acting as a kind of grand tour guide of Barbie's tangled universe.

Hotel Terminus consists of on-camera interviews and archival flashbacks. Overall, Ophuls holds a viewer in thrall. This is fascinating stuff. By the fourth hour, however, it tends to get rather tedious. Although he's made his point, Ophuls is not content to leave well enough alone.

It opens with a still photograph, presumably taken in South America, of a smiling Barbie in the company of friends, and ends in Lyon with a shot of a courageous French woman who risked her life to shield a Jewish friend from the Nazis.

Virtually all the interviews are instructive and illuminating, but a number stand out:

•Johannes Schneider-Mereck, Barbie's neighbor in South America, describes him as a fanatical Nazi, swindler and racist.

•Johann Otten, a school friend, remembers Barbie as a pious Catholic, "a decent boy" known as Sonny who was well liked and respected.

•Eugene Kolb, a retired U.S. intelligence agent who "ran" Barbie in post-war Germany, speaks of his competence as "a damn skilled interrogator" — a professional who was not "the type to engage in torture."

•Robert Taylor, the American who recruited Barbie, refers to him as "a Nazi idealist" and, under persistent questioning, confesses he does not know the meaning of that empty phrase.

•Simone Lagrange, an Auschwitz survivor from Lyon who was grilled by Barbie, recalls a mercurial personality whose fatherly calm could give way to a torrent of screaming.

•Nicole Gompel, another Jewish survivor, relates how Barbie tried to extract information from her father by throwing him into a vat filled with boiling water and ammonia.

•Wolfgang Gustmann, a former SS man, calls Barbie "a fantastic guy" and argues that the SS performed an invaluable role by preventing the Russians from reaching the English Channel!

•Armand Zuchner, a police officer under the collaborationist Vichy regime, dissimulates when asked about Frenchmen who worked hand in hand with the Germans.

•Daniel Cohn-Bendit, a former radical student leader, claims derisively that Germans care more about the death of 6 million trees than the deaths of 6 million Jews in the Holocaust.

•Ivo Omrcamin, the Croatian operator of the "rat line" that enabled Barbie and his ilk to resettle in South America, accuses "certain segments" of Jewry of "fabricating" Nazi crimes against humanity.

•Gaston Valasco, a Bolivian businessman, insists that Barbie was a "nice guy" and professes not to understand what the fuss is all about.

•Alvaro De Castro, Barbie's bodyguard in La Paz, claims fatuously that Barbie had Jewish friends in Bolivia who were not "full of anger."

•Ute Messner, Barbie's daughter, is genuinely mystified by his wartime record, and lingers on his fine qualities as a father.

•Regis Debray, a writer and advisor to French President Francois Mitterrand, says that French policy vis-a-vis Barbie was "to do nothing."

It is all very revealing. Barbie, the consummate war criminal who affixed pinups in his Lyon prison cell, could not have eluded justice for so many years unless he had been helped. And in Hotel Terminus, Ophuls establishes that fact beyond any reasonable doubt.

Furthermore, he produces yet more proof of the complicity of French men and women in Nazi crimes.

No stone is left unturned in Hotel Terminus, a film that transcends the Holocaust.

Former Vichy governor indicted for Jews' deportation

PARIS (JTA) -

The man who was governor of the Bordeaux region during the Nazi occupation of France was indicted last week for his role in the mass deportation of French Jews from the area between 1942 and 1944.

Maurice Sabatier, 91, faces charges of "crimes against humanity." His subordinate, Maurice Papon, was similarly charged in June, but his indictment was announced only two weeks ago.

They were the No. 1 and 2 men, respectively, of the Vichy regime in Bordeaux. The investigating magistrate is reported to have told Sabatier's lawyers that regardless of his advanced age, his indictment is necessary in order to press charges against Papon.

Both are accused by Nazi-hunter Serge Klarsfeld and many surviving Jews of having helped the Nazis identify and arrest local Jews, who were subsequently deported to death camps in Eastern Europe.

Sabatier has claimed repeatedly that he secretly helped many Jews and resistance fighters escape. When Gen. Charles de Gaulle's Free French forces liberated the Bordeaux region in 1944, Sabatier was suspended from office for four days while his file was examined.

U.S. cautiously welcomes Arab summit in Jordan

By
WOLF BLITZER

WASHINGTON — U.S. officials have cautiously welcomed the extraordinary Aqaba summit of Jordan's King Hussein, Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat held recently.

But they expressed doubt that it would have any immediate success in reviving the stalled peace process or in improving the strained relationship between Hussein and Arafat.

The officials, who spoke privately, agreed that the dramatic conference was designed to reaffirm the need for a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation in peace negotiations with Israel.

They also agreed that Muburak and Hussein — and possibly even Arafat — were anxious to signal their support for Labor Party leader Shimon Peres in the Nov. 1 elections in Israel.

The fact that Mubarak and Hussein, two moderate Arab leaders who have worked closely with the United States (and Israel) over the years, had managed to pull off the summit with Arafat was somewhat encouraging to Washington.

They noted that Arafat had come to Jordan — an indication of the PLO leader's weakened stance as opposed to Hussein's stronger position. "Hussein is king of the mountain," an American official said. "He knows that Arafat needs him more than he needs Arafat."

American officials said that Hussein would be extremely reluctant to enter into any fresh accord with Arafat unless the PLO offered "iron-clad" assurances of its intentions "in writing." In the past, the Americans recalled, Hussein has been burned by wishy-washy commitments from Arafat.

Other U.S. officials said that Arafat's willingness to come to Jordan also underlined the PLO's inability to control the Palestinian uprising in the territories. They said that the PLO, despite its propaganda, was not directing the intifada.

The real impact of the trilateral meeting in Aqaba, U.S. officials said, would become clear only after the U.S. and Israeli elections. They said that they would also be waiting to see what impact the meeting would have on the upcoming Palestine National Council assembly in Algiers later this month.

Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs Richard Murphy told a Congressional subcommittee earlier that the U.S. would attempt to revive its peace initiative after the Israeli and American elections — irrespective of the outcomes.

"This is generally a positive development," an administration official commented, referring to the Aqaba summit. "But let's not get carried away."

The capture last week of nine Palestinian terrorists planning attacks in Israel casts serious doubt over Arafat's recent declarations that he wants to pursue peace with Israel.

That view was expressed by Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, after seven Palestinian infiltrators waylaid in the southern Lebanon security zone were identified as members of Al Fatah, the military wing of the Palestine Liberation Organization controlled by Arafat.

Two other Palestinians captured at about the same time proved to be members of a dissident terrorist group.

"I don't like people who talk about a peace bloc and then send terrorists on their way to Israel," Peres told an election rally.

"I am more interested in the terrorists caught than in a thousand declarations by Arafat," the Labor Party leader said.

Infiltration attempts from southern Lebanon can be expected to increase, Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin told the cabinet. He said that was likely with the approach of the Palestine National Council meeting in Algiers, which is now scheduled to occur on or around Nov. 12.

The PNC, often described as the PLO's parliament in exile, is expected to declare a Palestinian state in the territories.

KROVZOV

I am grateful to David Cohen, of Montreal for sending me an interesting report of how he tracked down the origin of his late wife's family name.

I quote verbatim from his letter.

"My father-in-law had settled in Winnipeg, Manitoba. His family name was KROVZOV.

I checked Russian, Ukrainian and Polish dictionaries, and only in the Polish dictionary was there a word close enough to the name and that was KRAVITZ, which means a tailor. (The word is actually KRAWIEC — pronounced as in Duddy Kravitz).

It didn't take much imagination to realize that, while my father-in-law and family came from Kiev, Gbernia, his family must have originated from Poland and a member had been a tailor. His son would then have called himself, or others would have called him KRAVITZOW."

The letter is a model synthesis of curiosity, research and ingenuity.

Waldheim off to Syria

VIENNA (JTA) — Austrian President Kurt Waldheim is being urged to raise the case of Nazi war criminal Alois Brunner with Syrian officials during his upcoming visit to Damascus.

In Washington, meanwhile, six members of Congress have warned Turkish authorities that Waldheim's scheduled visit to Ankara could harm U.S.-Turkish relations.

Waldheim was to depart for Syria and Kuwait last week. On Nov. 2, he was scheduled to stop off in Turkey, which would be the first NATO nation to receive him since he assumed the presidency.

The U.S. warning was sent in a telegram to Turkish President Kenan Evren and Prime Minister Turgut Ozal from six members of the House foreign affairs subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East.

The telegram, initiated by Rep. Tom Lantos (D-Calif.), urged the Turkish leaders to cancel the meeting with Waldheim. "As members of Congress who value Turkish-U.S. relations, we are appalled and shocked at the news that Kurt Waldheim will be received by you early in November," the lawmakers said.

Brunner, one of the last major Nazi war criminals still at large, was a close associate of Adolf Eichmann in administering the Final Solution. He lives in Damascus.

Waldheim himself has been implicated in Nazi atrocities perpetrated by the German army unit he served in as an intelligence officer during World War II.

Since taking office in 1986, the one-time secretary-general of the United Nations has been the most isolated of presidents.

He is officially barred by the U.S. justice department from coming to the United States. He has not been invited to visit any European country, East or West.

Apart from an audience granted him in Rome by Pope John Paul II in 1987, Waldheim's ventures abroad have been confined to the Arab and Moslem worlds. He has visited Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Pakistan.

If Waldheim were to press the Syrian authorities to extradite Brunner, he would be acting against an Austrian Nazi who operated in the same territory as he did during his wartime service.

It was Brunner who organized the deportation of 40,000 Jews from Salonika, Greece, almost all of whom perished in the gas chambers.

Brunner has been given haven in Syria for decades. He is reported to have been injured by a letter bomb allegedly sent by the Israeli secret service, Mossad. But the Syrians are said to be protecting him well.

Senior Israeli diplomat going to Soviet Union

JERUSALEM (JPFS) — An informal breakthrough in Israeli-Soviet relations appears to have taken place with the granting of Soviet approval for the appointment of foreign ministry assistant director general Arie Levin as head of the Israeli consular delegation in Moscow.

Levin, one of the foreign service's highest ranking diplomats and the head of the foreign ministry's research division, will go to Moscow in 10 days time. He is slated to head the consular mission for a period of about two months, and will then resume his duties here.

Foreign Ministry sources said that although Levin's appointment does not signify a formal upgrading in the relations between the two countries, his stature and experience will lend a higher visibility and significance to the Israeli representation in Moscow and, as such, represents a real advance in the relations between the two countries.

The ministry hopes that Levin's appointment will pave the way for the consular delegation to engage in a political dialogue with Soviet officials. Until now the delegation has only engaged in a consular and technical dialogue.

Govt. has ignored population growth: Benvenisti

West Bank plans said to be faulty

By
JOEL GREENBERG

JERUSALEM (JPFS) —

After 21 years of rule in the West Bank, Israel has still not drawn up a comprehensive regional planning scheme that takes into account changes in the area's population and resources, says Dr. Meron Benvenisti, head of the West Bank Data Base Project (WBOP).

"No priority has been given to collecting data that could serve planning. It doesn't interest the government. After 21 years, regardless of the political party in power, this reflects neglect that has no justification," Benvenisti said.

Benvenisti has just released his research group's latest study. The West Bank and Gaza Atlas, published by The Jerusalem Post. The atlas was compiled by Benvenisti and Shlomo Khayat, a former chief planner of the Judea and Samaria military government, who in private practice has drawn up town-planning schemes for several West Bank Arab municipalities.

The atlas includes maps and statistics on such topics as Jewish and Arab population growth and distribution, infrastructure and transport, cultivation, town planning, and various Israeli political plans for border demarcation.

In an introduction, Benvenisti notes that his attempt to collect data for what was to be a land use and development plan for the territories came up against "an astonishing lack" of official data.

"Basic facts and figures, without which no planning project is feasible, are nonexistent at best, misleading and biased at worst," writes Benvenisti. "The authorities do not possess any population breakdown for West Bank cities and villages, there is no accurate data on economic activity, and indeed, even the official estimate of the total population of the occupied territories is unreliable. It was clear that the scarcity and unreliability of vital statistical data makes rational planning (of services) extremely difficult."

The delay in approval of regional and town plans in the West Bank and the lack of any regional planning schemes, Benvenisti and Khayat say, force Palestinians to build illegally and serve as a means of withholding and granting building permits at the whim of the military government.

The last regional planning scheme was drawn up by the British in 1941.

Among the findings in the atlas:

• The West Bank Palestinian population is greater by some 200,000 than figures released by the Central Bureau of Statistics. Benvenisti puts the figure at 1,067,873. His estimate for the Gaza Strip is 633,000.

• The areas in which the Palestinian population is growing fastest are precisely those the Labor Party wishes to retain in a peace settlement. The areas are adjacent to Jewish localities concentrated near Jerusalem and Tel Aviv, along the 1949-1967 borders. Palestinians are drawn to those areas because of jobs available in neighboring Jewish communities.

• Israeli land seizures have not led to a reduction in areas cultivated by Palestinians. The seizures have been mostly in rocky, uncultivated areas.

• Due to population growth and lagging infrastructure, there are fewer kilometres of road per person in the West Bank than there were in 1967. A dual transport system functions in the area, with Israeli bus lines travelling routes between different West Bank districts, and Arab bus lines functioning only within the districts.

The WBDP also released a study by attorney Carmel Shalev on human rights in the territories during the uprising. Entitled The Price of Insurgency, it chronicles allegations of human-rights violations caused by Israel's measures to quell the unrest, ranging from beatings to detention without trial.

The study says there is a dual system of justice in civil and military courts that discriminates against Arabs. For example, a Jewish resident of the West Bank who was convicted of killing a 13-year-old boy from the Balata refugee camp in 1982 was sentenced to six months of community service. After an appeal by the state, the sentence was extended to three years.

In contrast, Arabs have been given eight- and 10-year terms for throwing petrol bombs at military and civilian vehicles, and are liable to spend one year in jail for throwing stones.

The report notes a discrepancy between official policy guidelines on the use of force by Israeli soldiers and their implementation. The constant flow of complaints about brutality by soldiers indicates that such excesses have become the norm rather than being "exceptions."

In addition, "the failure to take serious punitive and deterrent action against both IDF personnel and Israeli civilians seem to be a blind-eye policy that has the effect of legitimizing this norm."

Polio shots are urged

OTTAWA —

Canadian health officials are telling travellers to be sure their polio immunization is up to date before going to Israel in the wake of the recent polio outbreak there.

Dr. Robert Wittes, chief of tropical health and quarantine at the Canadian Laboratory Centre for Disease Control, has issued a warning for Israel-bound travellers who have completed a primary series of immunizations.

Wittes said these people should get an additional booster dose unless they have had a booster within the last 10 years.

Further, he said those not previously immunized should get the complete course of three or more doses of oral vaccine or enhanced-potency inactiviated polio vaccine.

This advisory applies to everyone, Wittes noted, including those who went through the polio epidemics of the 1950s.

In the U.S. Dr. Walter Orenstein, director of the Division of Immunization at the Centres for Disease Control in Atlanta, recently announced that the polio outbreak in Israel should not deter travellers as long as their standard of immunization is updated [CJN Oct. 27].

Kucera invited Eban to join elder statesmen from several countries, including former U.S. president Jimmy Carter, at a conference on the Middle East here in December.

ORT's projects span the globe

By PAUL LUNGEN

TORONTO —

Robin Gilbert can lay claim to a remarkable "first."

Thirty years ago, fresh in his new job, he made his way to Ethiopia to negotiate an arrangement with king Haile Selassie to improve the living conditions for the country's "Falasha" Jews.

Not yet then a subject of intense concern in the Jewish community, Ethiopia's Black Jews were of keen interest for Israel's second president, Yitzhak Ben Zvi. He approached Gilbert's employer, the World ORT Union, which sent the 29-year-old Oxford University alumnus to negotiate some sort of arrangement.

Eventually, after Selassie was overthrown in a Marxist takeover, an agreement was hammered out and ORT opened "a major program in the Gondar Region" to instruct Ethiopian Jews in rural skills, such as well-digging, sanitation and tractor repair.

Though the arrangement was terminated after about four years (in the late 1970s, early 80s), it exemplified the far-flung nature of ORT's vocational projects, Gilbert said.

In Toronto and Montreal recently on a more mundane mission — to help strengthen the male leadership in the Canadian ORT organization, and update its supporters on its operations — the man from ORT discussed the accomplishments of the 108-year-old organization.

With 190,000 students in 30 countries benefiting from ORT schools and training, the organization last year operated on a budget of $130 million U.S., he said.

The bulk of ORT's activities are centred in Israel, where hundreds of thousands of youngsters — mostly high school-aged kids — have been trained in technical and vocational skills that give them lifetime occupations, he said.

Robin Gilbert

They serve as a key component in the Israeli defence establishment, he noted, providing the armed forces with "a high standard of maintenance" for high tech defence equipment.

"ORT is the most practical of all charities, in that instead of doling out money, we give (our students) a trade, a skill, a vocation with which they will be economically independent," Gilbert said.

After Israel, ORT's largest operations are in France and Argentina, both of which are home to substantial Jewish populations. There, in ORT's day and evening schools, students learn everything from cooking to computers.

While teens are a prime beneficiary of the programs, adults attending night school are retrained and updated in their skills, he noted.

Not only does ORT maintain its own schools (as in Argentina and Israel) but the organization runs programs in other Jewish and non-Jewish schools as well.

ORT maintains "far flung" operations, said Gilbert, London-based counsellor to the World ORT Union. "We've penetrated practically every Jewish community in the world," with the notable exception of the Soviet Union. Ironically, ORT was established in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad) in 1880, he said.

Eastern Europe, however, is still on the organization's agenda.

Though in recent years ORT has been excluded from aiding the Jewish communities there, the organization has returned to Hungary where it is providing equipment to the Jewish community in Budapest through the Anne Frank school.

"There is even a dream to return to St. Petersburg (i.e. Leningrad) one day, so what we started in 1880 could continue eventually. And with glasnost (openness), anything can happen."

ORT operates two schools in Bombay, said Gilbert, who was first director of ORT India. That has led to a marked increase in the standard of living for the Jewish community there, he noted.

And ORT is currently negotiating with the Chinese government about running a training program there. However, Gilbert said talks are still preliminary and no agreement has been reached yet.

He stressed that funds raised by the Jewish community "go towards Jewish programs" and when ORT works in China, Africa and elsewhere, the technical projects — though operated by ORT — are funded by government or non-governmental organizations.

Gilbert points with pride to one such project in Lima, Peru, funded by CIDA, the Canadian International Development Agency: a mother and child health care program. Mothers and child care givers are trained in nutrition, sanitation and other basics, he said.

From low tech to high tech, ORT has come a long way, Gilbert said — from mending simple electric circuits to training in laser technology and robotics. At the Jerusalem school of engineering and the ORT school in Carmiel, "top students will be at the degree level, a new departure for ORT," he said.

"It's an enormous story to tell."

Israel hits bases in Lebanon after terror upsurge

By JPFS & JTA

JERUSALEM —
Security forces have succeeded in uncovering the Shiite terror squad responsible for the recent suicide car bomb attack near the Good Fence between Israel and Lebanon. The attack claimed the lives of eight Israeli soldiers.

According to the daily Haaretz, a worse attack had not occurred since March 10, 1985, in an incident between the northern Israeli town of Metulla and the Lebanese town of Marjayoun. Twelve soldiers were killed and 14 injured.

After that, "car bombs became one of the principal weapons of the extremist Shiite organization Hizbullah in its struggle against the IDF and the South Lebanon Army operating in the security zone," Haaretz said.

On July 9, 1985, a car bomb took the lives of two IDF soldiers near Ras el-Bayada, on the security zone's coastal border.

The announcement of the capture of those responsible for the blast came a day after Israel Air Force and the South Lebanese Army launched wide strikes against Palestinian and Sunni Moslem targets on the third day of retaliatory attacks in southern Lebanon in the past week.

IAF planes flew two sorties against Palestinian terrorist targets along the coast. To the east, militiamen based in the Christian enclave of Jezzine stormed a position held by a joint force of Sunni Moslems and Palestinians.

The air strikes were the third and fourth since the suicide car-bomb attack. They also appeared to be tied to the capture of two squads of Palestinian terrorists on their way to attacks in Israel.

Military sources said all the Israeli planes hit their targets and returned safely to base. They described the targets as terrorist headquarters and bases used to launch attacks against Israel.

Reports from Lebanon said two F-15s launched a rocket attack against a Fatah Force 17 base in the Mieh Mieh refugee camp east of Sidon. Six people were reported killed and more than 40 wounded in the late morning attack.

Lebanese police said a senior PLO commander, Col. Mustafa Daoud, commander of the 1,000-strong Fatah militia, was among the dead. Among the wounded was another colonel, Mohsen Hallak, commander of the 1,000-man Beit al-Maqdes (Jerusalem) battalion.

There were no casualty figures for the afternoon raid which Lebanese sources said was directed at a pro-Syrian a-Saiqa base near Khalde, south of Beirut, and against a Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine base above the coastal town of Damour.

Meanwhile, to the east, militiamen allied with the SLA killed one gunman and captured three others after storming a position north of Kfar Falus, some 10 kilometres west of Jezzine. It was one of the first military-style offensives of the so-called Lahad forces, which receive arms and equipment from the SLA.

SLA sources said the position had been used for firing at the militiamen in the Jezzine area. After removing weapons, ammunition and equipment from the site, the position was blown up.

Reports from Lebanon said the position was held by the Sunni Popular Liberation Army and Palestinians.

The upsurge in terrorism prompted some members of the Knesset to suggest expanding Israel's border security zone in Lebanon and sealing it off from the rest of the country.

But Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin told members of the Knesset foreign affairs and defence committee that such measures were unrealistic.

If the security zone were sealed off, Rabin said, the 200,000 people living there would be deprived of their water supply and electricity, which originate further north.

Extending the zone northward would "simply cause trouble with the Lebanese population and would not increase security," he said.

Rabin said that since the car-bomb attack, an order has been revived requiring Lebanese civilians to travel no fewer than two in a car to reduce the probability of a suicide mission.

The security zone was established in 1985, when the IDF completed its phased withdrawal from Lebanon. The zone's purpose is to serve as a buffer between Israel's northern villages and towns and hostile elements in southern Lebanon.

Military sources stressed that the investigation into the suicide attack was continuing in earnest, but findings so far indicate the squad prepared for the attack within the security zone.

The sources identified the suicide attacker as Abdallah Atwah, a Shiite living in Beirut whose family is from a village inside the security zone. They said security forces have in custody a man, also from north of the security zone, suspected of accompanying Atwah from the north and instructing him on how to carry out the attack.

Investigators are certain that the white Toyota used in the attack was prepared with explosives inside the zone and that the car-bomber received help from local residents. The defence sources said it was likely that among those residents detained were some who had aided the attackers.

Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Dan Shomron said he did not consider the tragedy a failure by the army, but the result of an unlucky coincidence of a number of army cars coming together "for a few moments" with the suicide bomber lurking nearby seeking an opportune target.

The explosion appears to indicate Hizbullah, an Iranian-backed Moslem fundamentalist organization, is reverting to kamikaze-style terrorism. But while the organization reaped kudos in the Lebanese press for the slaughter, the act may have fewer long term effects.

"This was an act of desperation because they're in danger of being wiped off the map in Lebanon," said one south Lebanese source, who noted that Hizbullah doesn't have many friends in south Lebanon.

"Obviously it's going to give them an external political gain for a few days," said Itamar Rabinovich, head of Tel Aviv University's Dayan Centre for Middle East Studies. "In the ongoing struggle between Hizbullah and the Israeli military, it's a blow, but it doesn't quite change the balance of power."

The biggest danger to Israel, one south Lebanese observer said, lies in the possibility that the more powerful Shiite Amal militia may now feel compelled to intensify attacks on the security zone. Amal doesn't want to be "upstaged" by Hizbullah, which described its car bomb attack as a "gift to the intifada."

Hizbullah has repeatedly accused Amal of creating a second "security zone" for Israel in the south by preventing Hizbullah attacks.

Hizbullah has recently suffered several major setbacks. Amal evicted it from the south earlier this year, and the Israeli and South Lebanon armies have stepped up their attacks. In Beirut, Syrian troops have surrounded Hizbullah - controlled southern suburbs. Meanwhile, Iran's capitulation to Iraq's demands for a ceasefire in the Persian Gulf war dealt a demoralizing blow to radical movements like Hizbullah that receive their inspiration — and financing — from Teheran.

JNF attacks group's lawsuit

NEW YORK (JTA) —
The Jewish National Fund has called a group's lawsuit against the agency an attempt to "prostitute a philanthropy for its own misguided political ends."

In an angrily worded statement, the JNF singles out for scorn the mother of one of the four plaintiffs in the lawsuit.

Twice postponed at the plaintiffs' request, the suit accuses the philanthropy of misleading contributors into believing JNF allocates funds to Jews all over Israel, including the territories captured during the 1967 Six-Day War.

JNF is famous to Hebrew school children for its tree-planting campaigns, but it also funds parks, recreation and public works projects in Israel.

It claims it does not sponsor projects in the territories out of concern of losing its tax-exempt status under federal laws governing contributions outside of the United States.

JNF identifies Hadassah Marcus, 60, of New York, as the "inspirational force behind the lawsuit."

According to the JNF, Marcus has waged a 2-year campaign against the philanthropy after it returned her $5,000 contribution for a park project in the West bank settlement of Shiloh.

Those organizations support expanding Israel's borders well beyond the so-called Green Line.

She acknowledged her role in the lawsuit in an earlier interview with the Jewish Telegraphic Agency. Her campaign also includes charges against the United Jewish Appeal and the United Israel Appeal.

JNF has dismissed the plaintiffs' legal charges as fraud, and in the statement calls the suit "no more than a tactical campaign in their political crusade."

Israel banks lend Koor $10 m emergency funds

JERUSALEM (JPFS) —
A consortium of leading Israeli banks has agreed to lend Koor $10 million in emergency funds, as part of an interim arrangement meant to tide the company over for the next few weeks.

In return, the banks will receive as collateral the equivalent value of Hevrat Ha'ovdim's shares in Yakhin Hakal Ltd., one of the country's largest citrus-processing companies. Hevrat Ha'ovdim, Koor's parent company, holds half the shares in Yakhin, and the Jewish Agency holds the other half.

The Treasury, meanwhile, remains adamantly opposed to handing over any money to Koor unless Hevrat Ha'ovdim divests itself completely of its stake in Yakhin. The willingness of Hevrat Ha'ovdim's heads to sell off Yakhin has been the main factor blocking the transfer of $20 million in emergency aid promised to Koor by the government and the banks last week.

The $20 million was meant to finance Koor operations — purchasing raw materials, and paying suppliers and employees. The $10 million loan that the banks promised will ensure that the company's employees receive their October salaries this month.

Jewish organization heads term 60 Minutes' charges tame

AIPAC bruised but standing after TV show

NEW YORK (JTA) —

A beleaguered American Israel Public Affairs Committee emerged bruised but standing after its bout last week with CBS-TV's 60 Minutes.

AIPAC said in a statement that Mike Wallace's report on the powerful pro-Israel lobbying group attempted to depict its influence as "something negative or sinister."

But while agreeing with AIPAC that the program lacked balance, leaders of American Jewish organizations for the most part felt its charges were tame, compared to what had been feared in the weeks prior to the broadcast.

Those had been trying weeks for AIPAC, which is the most powerful voice in Washington on behalf of Israel and one of the most influential of all American lobbying groups.

AIPAC attempted to deflect ahead of time Wallace's charges that it "sets the line" for some 80 pro-Israel political action committees, in violation of federal laws governing PACs.

But then, the group was placed on the defensive after three major Jewish agencies were reported to have criticized AIPAC for acting "out of step with the consensus of the organized Jewish community" on at least three recent issues related to Israel.

The Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations held an emergency meeting to discuss the fallout of the 60 Minutes broadcast.

The meeting, at which members of the umbrella organization agreed that the report was "filled with distortions, innuendoes and inaccuracies," was the second in a week called to discuss criticism of AIPAC.

The central theme of Wallace's report was that AIPAC has exerted undue influence to ensure that Israel receives $3 billion in U.S. foreign aid, with little or no congressional debate. The report appeared to charge that AIPAC has engineered the defeat of U.S. senators and representatives because of their poor voting records on foreign aid and arms sales to Arab countries.

The report said that AIPAC had instructed pro-Israel PACs around the country to contribute money to the senatorial campaign of Rhode Island Lt. Gov. Richard Licht. Licht, who is Jewish, is challenging the incumbent, Republican Sen. John Chafee, who is seen as less sympathetic toward Israel.

Wallace produced a two-year-old memo that he said proved AIPAC has been urging financial support for Licht, in what he said was arguably a violation of federal law prohibiting lobbying groups from taking part in partisan politics.

AIPAC has since said the memo was written by a low-level staff person. AIPAC also said it does not have the power to direct fund-raising decisions.

AIPAC officials have said that while the group is prohibited from coordinating the activities of PACs, it often provides information at the request of AIPAC members who are involved in the political process.

AIPAC said that U.S. foreign assistance to Israel is based on Israel's role as a "critical United States ally, a fullfledged democracy, struggling to survive in a hostile and unstable part of the world."

The lobbying group said 60 Minutes had attempted to depict lawful participation in the political process as "something negative and sinister."

AIPAC said it is preparing a more detailed refutation of Wallace's charges.

Controversy flares up again over use of cross on Nov. 11

By
PAUL LUNGEN

TORONTO —

A controversy that first erupted one year ago over Remembrance Day symbols memorializing Canada's war dead has resurfaced.

The controversy focuses on a memorandum sent by the Ottawa offices of the department of veterans affairs to its north Toronto office notifying it "that this year's (memorial) display (should) contain no item that would offend the religious sensibilities of any person."

Responding to the memo in a number of radio spots last week, CFRB commentator Charles Doering said he found removal of the cross "insensitive." Repeating his on air commentaries, he told The CJN "people were tired of having their traditions taken away just to satisfy a small group."

He said the issue was brought up by "Jewish activists," adding the solution might be adding the Jewish Star of David and the Moslem Crescent to the memorial display.

The controversy was brought to public attention last year when a Jewish public service employee, Harold Bliss, complained over the inclusion of a "Cross of Sacrifice" (a cross with a sword painted or ingraved in the vertical stem) in a Nov. 11 Remembrance Day display in a government building at 4900 Yonge St. (CJN Nov. 19, 1987).

At the time, Bliss said the display, a small white cross flanked by two wreaths, was "a definite affront to the Jewish people and ignores the fact that Jewish soldiers also died." He called it "an insult to my faith" and complained it suggested that Jewish soldiers who fell "are being memorialized as Christians."

However, Vern Murphy, a spokesman for the department of Veterans' Affairs, told The CJN it had never been the department's policy to use "any religious symbol" in its displays. "We use the wreath" in ceremonies and displays, supplemented with use of the poppy, he said.

Last year, "volunteers" in the Yonge St. government offices placed the "Cross of Sacrifice" in the annual display, he said, adding it was always department policy to avoid any religious symbols. This year, the office was reminded not to employ any religious symbol.

He said the radio commentary was mistaken in implying DVA would not allow crosses to be used "in ceremonies." The department doesn't prevent other groups, such as the Royal Canadian Legion, from using the Cross of Sacrifice or other symbols in Remembrance Day events, Murphy stated.

Fred Hannington, dominion secretary of the Legion, said the primary memorial symbols employed by the Legion are the poppy and the wreath.

Murphy noted that the cross of Sacrifice is used as a centrepiece in every cemetery where Canadian war dead are buried, including two in Israel.

However, Bernie Farber, research director for Canadian Jewish Congress, maintains that using the Cross of Sacrifice "to memorialize Jews who fought and died is not appropriate and we've suggested that the Star of David be added to the cross in a complementary way so that Jews who died fighting shoulder to shoulder with their Christian comrades are memorialized properly."

Sam Pasternak, Toronto post commander of the Jewish War Veterans of Canada, agrees. Referring to the Cross of Sacrifice, he said it is not the terminology used to describe it that is important, but the perception that it is a Christian symbol

He said he preferred that no one religious symbol be used to memorialize Canada's war dead, but that if the cross is used, so too should a Jewish Star of David.

Loyalty to Israel tops in NB capital

FREDERICTON —

The Jewish population in this historic provincial capital of about 45,000 may be small, but it remains strongly loyal to Israel, says a community leader.

A large percentage of Fredericton's 80 Jewish families contribute to fund raising campaigns for Israel, Arnold Chippin said in an interview.

They are also active in the community's Orthodox synagogue, as well as in the local chapters of B'nai B'rith Canada and the Hadassah-WIZO Organization of Canada, Chippin said.

The Jewish population has been slowly growing in the past 20 years, with young professionals arriving to take positions at the city's two universities and government offices, the 33-year-old businessman said. Fredericton has the second largest Jewish population in the province, second only to Moncton.

Chippin made the comments following Fredericton's recent annual United Israel Appeal of Canada campaign event.

And for the first time in recent years, campaign contributions showed an increase of 7%, said Chippin, chairman of Fredericton's UIA campaign.

Special guests at the meeting included Metullah Mayor Yossi Goldberg and his wife, Galia, who spoke about their town's warm relationship with UIA and projects the organization has initiated there.

Arnold Chippin

Harris, from Toronto, also paid tribute to Ivan Levine, who ran last year's campaign. Other key campaign organizers included vice-chairman Weldon Levine and past chairman Martin Payne.

Judy Budovitch, chairman of Fredericton's UIA Women's Division, also addressed the audience, outlining her group's campaign results, which this year reached an all-time high.

Contributions to the Women's Division are expected to be up by 15% from last year.

Chippin told The CJN he believes this years turnaround in contributions may be due to hard work. A team of more than a dozen people canvassed the community, he said.

Chippin said many of Fredericton's older Jewish families have historically supported campaigns for Israel.

Originally, at the turn of the century, most of New Brunswick's Jews lived in the seaport of Saint John, he said.

But some eventually moved to Fredericton which is less than 100 kilometres north of Saint John.

Filed grievance

Bliss, chief steward in the Union of Public Works Employees, filed a grievance asking in part that a symbol of the Jewish faith be included in the display. He said he expected the request would be turned down and instead the cross would be removed.

Bliss' grievance was turned down by the director general of public works.

Doering, who protested removal of the cross, said he had received an "incredible response" to his commentary. "People are just completely incensed" that their symbol will not be used in the display, he said.

Accused anti-semite awarded religious prize

NEW YORK (JTA) — Despite charges of anti-semitism against the designated recipient of a prestigious religion prize, the Templeton Foundation has gone ahead and presented its 1988 award to Inamullah Khan, secretary-general of the World Muslim Congress.

Khan, a Pakistani, received the Templeton Prize on Sept. 28 in Melbourne, Australia. The presentation of the award was postponed for five months following accusations of Khan's anti-semitism that were made by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the American Jewish Committee.

The award had been announced March 2, but its scheduled presentation in April was postponed, reportedly at Khan's own request, while the Templeton Foundation investigated the Jewish group's accusations.

The ADL expressed outrage upon learning that Khan received the award.

Abraham Foxman, the organization's national director, wrote a cable to Sir John Templeton, the prize founder, saying ADL found it "shocking" that the foundation gave Kahn the award "in light of the anti-Jewish bigotry displayed by the World Muslim Congress during Khan's tenure as secretary-general."

Foxman claimed the foundation has made "a mockery of an award whose stated purpose is to honor those who have advanced the cause of religious progress."

Last April, the ADL sent Templeton a letter in which it provided documentation that the World Muslim Congress is "an openly anti-Jewish organization" that has endorsed Holocaust revisionism and repeatedly denied Israel's right to exist.

The league said it is "deeply troubled" by the foundation's decision to present the award in Melbourne, Australia, instead of doing so at an open ceremony in London. The switch, said Foxman, gives "every appearance of your awareness of the possible resulting negative publicity."

The World Muslim Congress was founded at the end of World War II by Haj Amin el-Musseini, grand mufti of Jerusalem and a known Nazi collaborator.

The congress became one of the non-governmental organizations of the United Nations Economic and Social Council.

According to the ADL, the congress mailed 1,000 volumes of anti-semitic material to members of the British Parliament in 1981 and to members of the U.S. Congress in 1982.

The material included Anti-Zion, a book by William Grimstad, a former officer of the American Nazi Party, and a book called The Six Million Reconsidered, which denies the Holocaust took place.

Copies of the two anti-semitic volumes were sent anonymously with Pakistani postage. The World Muslim Congress denied any involvement in the mailing, but the ADL said the mailing could be traced to a Saudi Arabian financing source behind the congress.

Khan wrote a letter in 1985 to The Spotlight, a publication of the anti-semitic Lobby, in which he expressed "our high appreciation of the noble service" rendered by the publication.

TETE-A-TETE

Three reporters lose press credentials

JERUSALEM (JTA) — Three foreign journalists lost their press credentials last week for violating censorship regulations.

Andrew Whitley of the Financial Times, Steve Weizman of Reuters news agency and Paul Taylor, the Reuter bureau chief in Israel, were summoned to the Government Press Office and ordered to hand in their press cards.

Their press privileges were suspended for failure to submit to the military censors stories alleging that Israel sent hit squads into the territories to murder leaders of the Palestinian uprising.

Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin categorically denied the reports. The story was totally groundless, he told reporters Tuesday.

The three journalists were told they had committed a "very grave violation" of the journalistic code of conduct.

The decision to penalize them followed daylong deliberations between officials of the defence and foreign ministries and the Prime Minister's Office.

Demands by the defence ministry for tougher measures were rejected because the three newsmen have had good records until now. They were warned, however, that a repetition of the violation would bring harsher action against them.

Taylor was assured that his suspension would not affect the operations of the Reuters bureau here. His office will continue to function and will not be denied government cooperation, including announcements and access to spokespersons.

Two American correspondents lost their press credentials earlier this year. Martin Fletcher of NBC News and Glenn Frankel of the Washington Post were punished for filing stories on the alleged Israeli involvement in the assassination in Tunis of Abu Jihad, second in command of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The stories were not submitted to the military censor. Fletcher and Frankel eventually had their press privileges restored.

El Al to expand S. Africa link

TEL AVIV (JPFS) — El Al is about to expand Israel's air links with South Africa, despite foreign ministry objections, but with the blessings of the transport ministry.

The new plan calls for increasing El Al and South African Airways flights between Tel Aviv and Johannesburg. At present, each airline operates one flight a week — and El Al officials have long believed they could fill more seats.

The traffic includes not only Israelis and South African Jews, but also others who use Israel as a stopover on their way to Europe. This route is considered preferable to the circuitous one around West Africa which SAA planes are forced to take because they are barred from African air space.

According to the new agreement, each airline will increase its flights, especially during holidays, until next spring.

The agreement has aroused the foreign ministry's ire because it runs counter to Israel's attempts to restrict ties with the white-ruled government.

The foreign ministry wrote to El Al on Aug. 7 that it opposed expanding Israel's air links with South Africa. Many countries have restricted their air links: Pan Am and Australia's Qantas have discontinued their flights to South Africa, and some European carriers have scaled down their operations.

King Hussein's "intervention" denounced

Shamir calls Peres "murderer of the truth"

leader Peres an edge over his Likud opponent, an overwhelming 92% of Israelis surveyed said the debate would not change their opinions when they go to the polls. A mere 8% said it might.

According to a Maariv poll, viewers thought Peres the better debater by a margin of 48% to 41%. Ten percent called the face-off a tie.

The debate, which was not broadcast live, was the first and only televised exchange between the leaders of the two major parties. The antagonists were more or less civil, but spoke less to each other than to the invisible viewing audience.

Shamir urged the electorate to give his Likud bloc a strong mandate in the next Knesset. Peres appealed for the same for Labor.

The debate was moderated by Dan Shilon, a popular army radio commentator. The candidates were not given the questions in advance.

Shamir vowed he would not willingly initiate a new unity coalition government should elections be as close and inconclusive as the last.

He said he had raised the idea of a unity coalition even before the 1984 elections "and Mr. Peres refused, then after the (election) results agreed."

Shamir failed to mention that Likud, too, was unable to form a government on its own in 1984.

Analysts suggested that Shamir was not ruling out another unity coalition, but only one in which Peres headed the Labor component.

That gave rise to speculation that in a post-election stalemate, the Likud leader might attempt to form a unity government with Laborite Yitzhak Rabin, who is defence minister in the outgoing government.

Shamir, however, acused Labor of "disloyalty" during the two parties' four-year political marriage of convenience.

Turning from Peres and speaking directly into the TV camera, Shamir said, "This time I am asking the electorate to give the Likud the strength to set up a broad government in which all the partners will be loyal."

He claimed Labor's disloyalty had prevented the unity government from achieving greater success.

Peres said in response that his two pledges in the 1984 campaign had been to get the Israel Defence Force out of Lebanon and to slow down galloping inflation.

"I promised and I kept my promise," he said referring to his two-year turn as Premier in the unity government.

"This time I promise, if elected, to start negotiations to get the country out of the cycle of periodic war, and to head toward new economy growth," Peres said.

He said he would not mind heading another unity government if necessary, but did not seem enthusiastic over the prospect.

• The campaign veered into the low road as the leaders of the Labor Party and the Likud hurled personal invectives in the aftermath of the relatively restrained television debate.

Peres has called Shamir a "murderer of peace."

In media interviews, Peres charged that Shamir was guilty of rabble-rousing, lies and campaign tactics that would be outlawed in any Western democracy.

• Shamir denounced as "crass intervention" in Israeli political affairs an interview on an American television network program with Jordan's King Hussein.

Speaking on ABC's Nightline program, Hussein endorsed the Labor Party's approach to a peace settlement, but warned that a continuation of Shamir's policies would be an "absolute disaster."

Many Israelis, including pro-Labor people, share Shamir's criticism. But Peres called the interview a coup and said he wished there were more such peace moves by Arab leaders "following the Labor line."

He said Hussein knows well that Labor refuses to cede all of the territories and that it insists on a permanent Israeli security presence on the banks of the Jordan River.

Nevertheless, Hussein is ready to begin negotiations, Peres said.

Shamir, when asked, refused to say flatly that he would never withdraw from the West Bank.

He declined to offer any sweeping undertakings, stressing rather Likud's adherence to the two-phase formula for Palestinian autonomy specified in the Camp David accords.

Shamir conceded that the Arabs do not accept his approach now. But he argued that they would if and when Likud was decisively returned to power and they realized that the international peace conference advocated by Labor was a non-starter.

• In a significant foreign policy statement which appeared to be aimed at King Hussein, Shimon Peres pledged his commitment to the principles of his April 1987 London Agreement with the Jordanian monarch.

"The first thing I will do as Prime Minister will be to go back to that initiative and call upon the U.S., Jordan and the Palestinians to convene — as soon as possible — an international conference that will facilitate direct negotiations," Peres said.

The 2½-page statement, which he read out to the Foreign Press Association in Jerusalem, had been meticulously worded by Peres himself.

"I am convinced that King Hussein is serious in his desire for peace," Peres said. "Neither he nor we have an alternative. Otherwise we shall destroy our economies and the future of our children."

• Rabbi Meir Kahane, whose extremist Kach party was disqualified from the elections, urged his followers to boycott the voting.

He told a rally of some 2,000 here that the ban was a "conspiracy of the Likud and Labor." He accused Likud of treason.

• Gov. Michael Dukakis said that progress toward peace in the Middle East does not depend on who wins the Israeli elections, but on Arab leaders being willing to negotiate with Israel.

PLO advice to Israelis not likely to change voting

a rightist government in Israel would find it easier to negotiate with them with a cooperative leftist opposition, rather than the other way around, so the theory goes.

There is no way to tell what the PLO is really after when it encourages Israeli Arabs to "vote left." But it hardly matters.

The change will be if Israeli Arabs and perhaps Jews perceive the PLO as a legitimate negotiating partner instead of a terrorist organization.

Good showings by the Communists and the Progressive List for Peace — the two Israeli parties closest to the PLO — would be perceived as a gain for the PLO in its struggle with the forces of Moslem fundamentalism, in Israel and the territories.

PLO activists here and abroad have long feared that Moslem fanatics will take over the Palestinian movement. They have legitimate cause for concern.

The new Arab Democratic Party, the first virtually all-Moslem list, was on the ballot in Knesset elections.

It is a phenomenon that has emerged for the first time in an Israeli election campaign — the intervention of Moslem fundamentalists.

In past election campaigns, Moslem fundamentalists stood aloof, and the parties that courted Arab voters avoided any religious coloration.

Now, however, leaders of the Islamic movement were urging Arabs to vote. They favor no particular party, but clearly pointed to the "forces of peace."

In the Arab political lexicon, that excludes the parties of the right.

The most likely beneficiary of the fundamentalist involvement was Knesset member Abdel Wahab Darousha. He quit the Labor Party earlier this year in protest against Rabin's measures to suppress the Palestinian uprising.

Darousha, 45, set up his own Arab Democratic Party, which is the first and only all-Arab political party in Israel. The first eight candidates on its election slate are Moslems. The ninth is a Christian Arab and the 10th a Druze.

That makeup gives Darousha an advantage over the two other pro-Palestinian state parties: the Communists and the Progressive List for Peace, whose slates include both Jews and Arabs.

Darousha is likely to be reelected to the Knesset. The polls give his party one or two Knesset seats.

But the Communists are still expected to draw the largest Arab vote, as they have done in the past, which would give them 5 to 6 seats, according to the polls.

Companies report decreased rates

at the end of the tunnel, or for politicians in need of a pre-election boost.

In industry, most companies reported lower activity levels that encompassed lower output, sales and capacity utilization rates. The decline in sales to the local market actually worsened in the July-September quarter, while export sales stopped growing and orders for the coming months turned down, after more than a year of steady, if unspectacular, gains.

Construction and hotels also provided a gloomy picture of reduced activity, but in the commercial sector most companies reported that the downtrend in sales had halted.

Bronfman going to Soviet Union

This past week also witnessed advances in Jewish religious life in Russia. Rabbi Adin Steinsaltz returned to Israel after a stay of several weeks, where he made preparations for the opening of a yeshiva in Moscow, also to be held in February. The yeshiva, the first to open in about 30 years, is to have a staff of 14 Torah scholars from the West.

Steinsaltz also gave a series of lectures on religion under the auspices of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, and made arrangements for scholars from around the world to gain access to the treasures of Judaica in Soviet archives that have been closed away for decades.

Leibler, too, was active on the religious front. He secured the agreement of the ministry of religious affairs that two young Chabad Chassidim from Moscow could come to Australia to be trained in ritual circumcision and the kosher slaughter of meat. As part of this agreement, a rabbi and a cantor from Australia will be invited to teach in the Moscow synagogue.

The Soviet minister of religious affairs, K. Hartchev, promised Leibler that he would authorize the establishment of yeshivot in Leningrad, Kiev and other cities "if applications by local Jews were made."

Another encouraging promise heard by Leibler, this time in a meeting with Yuri Reshetov of the foreign ministry, was that Soviet emigration laws would be significantly liberalized "before the end of the year."

Leibler's coup in launching the Mikhoels Cultural Centre has in a way upstaged the next act in the ongoing revival of Soviet Jewish cultural and religious life. This is to occur this week, when the heads of the Jewish Agency, Simcha Dinitz and Mendel Kaplan, visit Moscow as part of a delegation headed by WJC President Edgar Bronfman. The delegation is to dedicate the newly-established Jewish cultural centre attached to the Moscow synagogue.

Dancing, singing mark Baycrest's 70th birthday

By CYNTHIA GASNER

TORONTO —

It was most fitting that Pat Friedland, the president of Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care's Women's Auxiliary, opened a full day of celebrating on the Centre's 70th anniversary with the theme A Great Age for Living.

For it was a small group of women from the Ezras Noshim Society who raised the money to open the doors of a small house on Cecil St. in 1918 and founded the Toronto Old Folks Home, said Eddie Goldstein, a past president of Baycrest.

He told the early morning guests that the volunteers cooked, sewed and performed many tasks to help the frail elderly in the community.

Speaking in Yiddish and English, Friedland welcomed the hundreds of residents, patients, their families, staff, volunteers and friends who came to rejoice at the community party.

The sunlit Silverman Garden Court was festively decorated with colorful balloons and banners as pianist Noam Eisen and other entertainers sang "frailiche" (joyous) songs. Led by Friedland, the residents and volunteers joined in the singing and dancing.

The Auxiliary president paid tribute to the late Dora Till, the founding president of the Auxiliary and to Sam Ruth, "Mr. Baycrest — for the many times he brightened all our days with a gentle touch, a warm smile and a kind word."

Molly Ray and Lou Sharf, residents of the Home, added their words of appreciation to Ruth, who served as executive director of Baycrest for almost a quarter of a century, and they presented him with a gift from the residents, members and patients.

The mood of celebration was everywhere. The Men's Service Group hosted their Sunday Brunch for male residents and patients. The Shriner's Band entertained as the many volunteers of the men's group circulated among their guests adding the flavor of a family simcha.

People wandered through the buildings, greeting each other with "mazel tov" and "happy birthday." Exhibits depicted the history of the Jewish Home for the Aged from Cecil St. to the move to Baycrest Ave. in 1954, and the expansion of services to include day care, a new 10-storey Jewish Home for the Aged, the Baycrest Terrace and Joseph E. and Minnie Wagman Centre, and the recent completion of the 300-bed Baycrest Hospital in 1986.

A luncheon was taking place in the Wagman Centre Dining Room for 1987-88 endowment donors hosted by senior staff and board executives. This was followed by a reception for donors to the Hospital, hosted by the Baycrest Foundation board, the funding arm of the Centre.

Eric Exton, a past president of Baycrest spoke on behalf of the thousands of people who were the recipients of "that special human being, Sam Ruth, who patterned and molded the Centre." In his honor, the executive offices were dedicated in Sam Ruth's name.

To top off a wonderful day of merriment and thanksgiving, the Silverman Garden Court was the setting for a cocktail supper for the board of governors and top donors to the new Baycrest Hospital campaign.

Stephen Rudin, the executive director of Baycrest, welcomed the guests and thanked Phyllis Flatt and Sheila Loftus, the chairpersons of the 70th anniversary advisory committee.

The chairman of the board of directors, Fred Karp, recalled the milestones in the growth and expansion of the Baycrest Centre. "We have much reason to be proud," said Karp. "It is thanks to many of you who are here today. We have come a long way, but we have much further to go."

Sydney Loftus, the president of the Centre, spoke of the future. "The next generation of seniors will be the aging baby boomers. They will bring along with them all the high expectations and values of their life experiences. These are exciting times, and we have a full agenda ahead of us."

Pat Friedland, Stephen Rubin (centre) and Sydney Loftus, cut the cake at a recent cocktail supper for the Board of Governors celebrating the anniversary.

To make a presentation to Sam Ruth, Abe Posluns, president of Baycrest for 25 years and a close friend of the recipient, who recalls accompanying his mother and the Ezras Noshim ladies to the house on Cecil St. when he was a child, said, "Baycrest is what Baycrest is — one of the best geriatric centres in the world — because of Sam Ruth."

He told of Ruth's difficult childhood — placed in a nursing home at the age of 7, self-supporting at 17, his accomplishments at the University of Illinois, and his arrival in Canada in 1956 where he headed the Centre until his retirement several years ago.

As well, Ruth served in many capacities in the community helping the Chinese, Japanese and Italian communities establish facilities for the elderly and he serves as a consultant to the government.

Ruth was presented with a sculpture of the former Jewish Home for the Aged on Cecil St. and the new Baycrest Hospital. After words of gratitude from the honoree, a large birthday cake completed the formal ceremony.

The successful community party, with participants from all segments of the community and recipients of the care provided at Baycrest, reinforced the theme of the day, A Great Age For Living, and the 70th anniversary was a great day of fun and celebration.

sparks from the torah

By
RABBI MEIR URI GOTTESMAN

Parshat Chayai Sarah

A good woman makes a man great.

The wife of the brilliant "Ramo" (Rabbi Moshe Isserles, co-author of the Shulchan Aruch), died and the great rabbi himself rose to eulogise her. Quoting from verses in the Tanach, he delivered a brilliant address that electrified the mourners.

Rabbi Gottesman

A time later, the Ramo approached his former father-in-law, Reb Shacno, for permission to marry his other daughter, his late wife's sister. Reb Shacno refused, saying: "The eulogy you gave my daughter was so brilliant and well thought out, it was impossible for you to compose it in the few hours from her death. You must have been mulling over the eulogy when she was still alive! And such a husband I don't want for my daughter . . ." (Fun Unzer Alten Oitzer)

"And the life of Sarah was a hundred years, and twenty years, and seven years — these were the years of the life of Sarah . . ." (Breshit 23:1)

What strange extra words: a hundred years, twenty years, seven years. Why not write simply — 127 years, period?

The commentator Rashi struggled with this problem, and commented: To teach that at 100 she was like a 20 year old without sin, and at 20 she was beautiful like seven.

Unassuming

Hmphh! Twenty like seven for beauty . . . Is there then any problem with the beauty of a 20-year-old woman that she has to be compared to seven? Oh, to be 20 again! (Actually, oh, to be 40 again!)

But — explains Reb Issachar Grobart — to teach that just as she was unassuming about her looks at seven, so also was she natural and unassuming about her looks at 20. She was beautiful without artifice; she was beautiful from inside.

There is a terrible epidemic going on in the Toronto Jewish community. The beauty epidemic. The handsome epidemic. The smile epidemic.

Abraham and Sarah were beautiful people. They were married for decades. They were poor for many years. They were childless. But they had the strength and the love and the bond between them, to build a bayit ne'eman, to build a home that was full of life and love for them and for others. They had strength in each other. And then eventually, they acquired a great blessing upon themselves! For their kindness to others, for their mutual strength, they founded a nation!

Loose cannons

There are so many loose cannons rolling around town. Single men, single women, looking, looking, looking, until their eyes can fall out. What are they looking for? What are they waiting for? Will they always be twenty, or 30? When will they build their homes? When will they establish their families? When will they take their place?

When will they stop being afraid? This writer speaks to so many single people. They are so afraid. They are hesitant. Maybe. Maybe marriage will fail. Maybe it's not the right one. I will wait, and wait and wait! Wait for what? Wait for the Moshiach? Wait until life has passed by? Wait until the biolgical clock narrows and blocks the options?

Life, every day of life, is one great plunge into doubt. Nothing is safe. Nothing is sure. Everything is a risk. But only those who are willing to take risks are truly alive, truly whole!

If you are single, don't be afraid. We have a good God in the world. There are so many fine people out there, so many.

"Difficult haul" ahead for Israel

CJC leadership mission returns

MONTREAL —

Canadian Jewish Congress leadership concluded upon return from a fact-finding mission to Israel that it was an "invaluable learning experience," but also agreed that "we are in for a long and difficult haul" regardless of the election outcome there.

Congress president Dorothy Reitman said the delegation, consisting of 20 CJC executive committee-members, officers and other leaders, was united in the belief that more leadership and community education was an "essential" for insight on Middle East issues.

The need for continued monitoring of the media "with more effective intervention" was also expressed.

There was a strong consensus also that "there is no substitute for a personal visit to Israel," and that efforts should continue toward that end, Reitman said, "in order to ensure the strengthening of commitment of our Jewish adults and to ensure the involvement of our youth. . . ."

Congress delegates took part in a busy itinerary during their stay.

One of the highlights was the first screening of a CJC video — Voices of Survival — recounting the experiences of Canadian Holocaust survivors.

Congress leadership also met with Soviet Jewish leadership living in Israel at the Jewish Agency.

A particular highlight was a visit by the Congress mission with Ethiopian Jewish community leader Rabbi Yosef Hadane, at Ramot Shapira.

The delegation was joined there by Mr. and Mrs. Stan Cytrynbaum and Barry Smith, who had just returned from Ethiopia.

Congress delegates devoted a portion of the time in seeking more background about the Palestinian problems.

The group visited the West Bank, including the Jewish settlement of Tekoa, and was briefed by a Palestinian Arab, Zhiad Abu Zayad.

The mission met also with Yosef Goell, a political analyst with The Jerusalem Post.

Congress participants also spent a day visiting the Ben-Gurion University of the Negev and Beersheva, where the accomplishments of the Project Renewal efforts were seen.

As well, the mission heard a lengthy briefing on the West Bank situation by Col. Raanan Gissin, the Israeli Defence Force spokesman for the territories.

The group went up to the Galilee and was also briefed on the security situation on the Lebanese border. One location visited was the outpost of Shomera, and another was the Kibbutz Sassa on the Lebanese border.

Canadian Ambassador James Bartelman met with the CJC delegation at his residence. The Canadians also attended a dinner hosted by Keren Hayesod at Beit Shalom Jerusalem, which was also attended by former Israeli diplomats to Canada and Canadian residents in Israel.

Reitman said the group agreed that similar trips to Israel should be conducted annually.

Na'amat celebrating 50th

THE STORY OF CHAIM RUMKOWSKI AND THE JEWS OF LODZ

produced by FOJ Film production AB and Swedish Television STV 1

THE STORY OF CHAIM RUMKOWSKI AND THE JEWS OF LODZ is a 55-minute film on the Nazi-imposed Jewish Council in the ghetto of Lodz, the second largest ghetto in wartime Poland. Chaim Rumkowski, appointed by the Germans as head of the Jewish Council, was responsible for establishing a vast bureaucracy which administered all social services within the ghetto, including education, medical care, sanitation, police and fire departments. Encouraged by the Germans, Rumkowski attempted to turn the Lodz ghetto into an industrial centre that would be indispensable to the German war effort, thus enabling the Jews to survive.

Utilizing rarely seen archival materials, including hundreds of photographs taken by Jewish Council photographers and other ghetto inhabitants, the film depicts the activities of the Jewish Council, the conditions of daily life for the ghetto inhabitants, Rumkowski's relationship to the Nazis, the gradual disintegration of the ghetto, and the deportations to the death camps.

Move welcomed by BB League for Human Rights

Heritage language program to be mandatory

By JEFF ROSEN

TORONTO —
The Ontario government's decision to make the Heritage Languages Program mandatory in elementary schools has been welcomed by the B'nai B'rith League for Human Rights.

"Heritage language programs are a very important element of the development of a truly multicultural society within our bilingual framework," said Gerry Rose, co-chairman of the central cabinet of the League.

"They allow for languages and cultures to be maintained alongside our two primary languages," Rose said. While a number of boards of education have implemented these programs on their own initiative, many others have been slow to meet the needs of our evolving population."

Beginning in September 1989, a school board will be required to provide heritage language classes when a request to teach a particular language is made by the parents of 25 or more students of that board. A board may either offer the classes itself or make an arrangement with another school board.

"We understand the important link between languages and culture," Education Minister Chris Ward said. "In heritage language classes, our children can appreciate and take pride in their diverse ethnic, backgrounds, developing understanding and tolerance, qualities which, when acquired early, will last a lifetime."

Multiculturalism Minister Gerry Phillips noted that the government's decision to make the program mandatory is a key step in implementing its multiculturalism strategy, which is designed to "ensure equal opportunity, full participation and responsible citizenship for all Ontarians regardless of cultural heritage or race."

Ward said school boards will have the option of offering heritage language classes after school, in the evenings, on weekends or through an extended day program.

Rabbi Irwin Witty, executive director of the Board of Jewish Education, said that while the government's action will have little impact on the Jewish school system, it is a long overdue step.

"It opens up heritage language instruction to a variety of ethnic communities in Ontario to allow them to transmit their ancestral tongues to their children," he said.

The legislation will also permit public school students to attend a heritage languages program offered by another public school board.

To assist school boards in delivering heritage language classes, the ministry of education will provide a resource guide and provide incentive funds to train heritage language instructors, to support research in the area and to develop student learning materials.

Currently 68 school boards offer more than 4,000 classes in 62 heritage languages to about 93,000 students. Last year, ministry grants to school boards for heritage language programs totalled more than $11 million.

Jacqueline Latter, Hebrew heritage language representative for the Toronto school board's heritage language and concurrent program committee, praised the government's new program, saying that the City of Toronto has been successfully offering such programs for the past 10 years.

"I applaud the ministry's decision as it will ensure that such programs will be carried out by other school boards," said Latter, candidate for school trustee in Toronto's Midtown municipal electoral distict.

Israeli ministry bans Last Temptation of Christ

JERUSALEM (JPFS) —
The interior ministry's film and theatre censorship board voted recently to ban the screening here of Martin Scorsese's controversial movie The Last Temptation of Christ.

There has been a campaign by local Christian leaders and fundamentalist Christian supporters of Israel abroad to prevent the film from being shown in the Holy Land.

However, Yehoshua Justman, chairman of the censorship board, denied that the decision was due to political pressure. "The debate was solely between members of the board. The film touches on the very tenets of the Christian faith, violates censorship regulations and article 149 of the criminal code, which forbids offending religious beliefs. The board voted by an overwhelming 16 to 3 to ban the film," he said.

The decision is absurd," countered Taly Carmel of Pirsum Ratz, the film's publicity agents. "In all the Christian countries, including Italy, they've allowed the film to be shown. But here they ban it."

Justman cited precedents for the board's decision, such as the banning several years ago of the film The Passover Plot, which alleged that the resurrection of Jesus had been faked. He added that there was no comparison between The Last Temptation and a film such as The Life of Brian, a New Testament parody which was allowed to be screened.

"The Life of Brian was just a comedy, but this movie is a serious film which is a direct distortion of the New Testament," he said.

Monitor Soviets, Cotler says

Watchdog group urged

By
BELINDA SILBERMAN

TORONTO —
An international human rights watchdog group should be created in Canada to monitor conditions in the Soviet Union, says a leading human rights activist.

Irwin Cotler says a permanent, fact-finding "Canadian Helsinki Commission" would let Soviet officials know others are watching the situation and are prepared to hold the USSR to human rights promises it made when it signed the Helsinki Final Act.

"I think it would not only be another means of letting the Soviets know and indeed letting the victims of human rights violations know that we are there, but it would also provide Canadians with a kind of legal framework within which we would be able to make ongoing representations," Cotler said in an interview.

"Soviet citizens could also appeal to the commission."

The 48-year-old law professor was recently in Toronto to participate in a Soviet Jewry program held at B'nai Torah Congregation.

About 150 people attended the event co-sponsored by Canadian Jewish Congress's Ontario Region Soviet Jewry committee. The program was held to promote the plight of the Lein family, B'nai Torah's adopted Refuseniks in Leningrad.

Evgeny Lein, 49, is one of three former Prisoners of Zion to still remain in the Soviet Union. The former mathematician, his biochemist wife, Irina, 49, and their 17-year-old son, Alexei, have been denied emigration permission since 1978.

Cotler, who teaches at McGill University, outlined to the audience a strategy to improve human rights in the Soviet Union.

His 12-point advocacy plan included working to make the Soviet Jewry cause a priority for a human rights Canadian foreign policy and for Canada-Soviet relations.

"What must be realized here is that Soviet Jewry is not just a Jewish issue, but is in the most profound sense a human rights issue par excellence," Cotler said.

"It embraces the most fundamental of international human rights — be it the right to leave, the right to family reunification or the right to live in human dignity."

Cotler's plan also included:

- Involving the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry;
- Making human contact with Soviet Jews through correspondence and telephone calls;
- Making representations to the Soviet government;
- Establishing a code of conduct for Canadian businesses working in the Soviet Union;
- Developing in Canada a registry to monitor human rights in the Soviet Union;
- Sending missions to the Soviet Union;
- Engaging in international human rights advocacy by appealing through places like the "international court of public opinion" for the redress of human rights violations;
- Working with other human rights groups like the Canadian Bar Association to create a "coalition of conscience" for oppressed Refuseniks;
- Engaging in public education; and
- Addressing the "specificity" of human rights violations in the Soviet Union, including not only those suffered by Soviet Jewry, but other groups such as Pentacostals.

Cotler made similar recommendations last year to the House of Commons' standing committee on human rights.

In a report issued this summer on human rights behind the Iron Curtain, the 7-member committee recommended Canada develop some way to monitor the situation in the Soviet Union.

Meanwhile, at B'nai Torah's recent program promoting the Leins, Elona Lazaroff, the shul's Soviet Jewry chairman, urged people to act soon because Alexei is due to enter the army in nine months.

"If Alexei is drafted into the army, he will never be granted an exit visa because they will say he is privy to state secrets," she said.

Other speakers included Willowdale MP John Oostrum; Willowdale Liberal candidate Jim Peterson; as well as Chuck Zaionz, the CJC's Ontario Region chairman; Wendy Litwack and Marsha Slavens, co-chairmen of the CJC's Ontario Region Soviet Jewry committee; Joyce Eklove, vice-chairman; and Dr. Howard Langer, a member of B'nai Torah's Soviet Jewry committee.

Human rights conditions

Cotler said a Canadian watchdog group could monitor human rights violations in the Soviet Union using a checklist of six "verification measures."

The measures could evaluate on a daily basis whether there had been a significant and sustained increase in Soviet Jewry emigration; a resolution to thousands of family reunification cases; a general release of political prisoners; protection for the exercise of religious and cultural rights; protection of national minorities' rights; and an end to Soviet-sponsored anti-semitism.

The commission could also monitor human rights conditions in other nations that have signed the Helsinki Final Act, he said.

Interfaith Council on Soviet Jewry

Ministers attend session

By BELINDA SILBERMAN

TORONTO —

Members of the Toronto Interfaith Council on Soviet Jewry have mixed reactions over the turnout of only about 25 invited ministers to a recent meeting.

"We were disappointed," said Rev. John Erb, chairman of the 19-member committee, which is made up of Jewish and Christian clergy.

"We realize Soviet Jewry is not a priority in some people's lives. Some clergy are very busy — they've got so many other priorities."

However, Wendy Litwack, liaison between the council and Canadian Jewish Congress's Ontario Region Soviet Jewry committee, said she was "pleased" by the turnout.

"I wasn't expecting any more than that," said Litwack, co-chairman of the CJC committee.

"To me, we had about 25 new faces we had never seen before and we can add them to our mailing list."

More than 150 Christian clergymen — in some cases as many as four from the same church — were invited to attend the council's special open meeting to help publicize the plight of three former Prisoners of Zion, who are still in the Soviet Union.

Organizers hoped the ministers would encourage their congregations to take action on behalf of Moscow Refusenik Vladimir Kislik, and Leningrad Refuseniks Evgeny Lein and Roald Zelichonok. Also highlighted was the case of Leningrad Refusenik Elena Keis, a leader of the women's Refusenik movement in the Soviet Union.

But only between 20 and 25 ministers showed up, including Anglican priests, United Church ministers, a Roman Catholic priest and Evangelical clergymen.

Soviet Jewry activists and rabbis also attended the meeting held at the historic Timothy Eaton Memorial Church on St. Clair Ave. W., the second largest United Church in Canada.

Litwack said the clergymen can potentially publicize the plight of Soviet Jews to thousands of people in the Christian community.

"They have to do so little to do so much, and it's only a few minutes from the pulpit to get their congregations to act," Litwack told The CJN.

The interfaith council — created in the spring of 1985 — includes 13 ministers, three rabbis, a nun, York University Prof. Irving Abella, and Litwack, as well as a mailing list of more than 50 clergymen.

During the 2-hour meeting, Erb, of the St. Michael and All Angels Anglican Church, urged Toronto's Jewish and Christian communities to adopt the three former Prisoners of Zion. He appealed to clergymen to tell their congregations of the Refuseniks' plight and to encourage them to write letters to Soviet officials asking them to grant exit visas.

"We have found time and time and time again, the more letters that are received from around the world, the more influence they have," Erb said.

Former Leningrad Refusenik Yakov Gorodetsky, who emigrated with his family to Jerusalem in 1986, told the audience that Kislik, Lein and Zelichonok have been punished "for their courage, for their dedication to the Soviet Jewry cause, for their desire not to compromise with Soviet authorities, but to go their own way — to be righteous and to be sincere."

"To deny rights guaranteed by international protocols such as the Helsinki Final Act is a matter of the violation of human rights," Lucyk said.

"For anyone committed to the biblical concept of "mishpat" — of justice — the plight of Soviet Jews is a human and a biblical issue of human rights and of justice."

Other speakers included Irwin Cotler, a leading human rights activist; Rabbi Erwin Schild, of the Adath Israel Congregation; Rabbi Dow Marmur, of Holy Blossom Temple; and Litwack.

UNITED JEWISH APPEAL

Making a difference

These "fashionable" gentlemen are smiling with good reason. Mel Leader, Al Israel and Marvin Goodman, Fashion Division co-chairmen, are letting Max Handelman (seated) know how well the campaign is progressing in their division ... and getting better.

Former Torontonian Dr. Aviva Weisebord, was the guest speaker at an evening sponsored by the Shalom Division of Women's Campaign.

Dr. Weisebord is a psychologist and the director of Eitsa, a phone-line for advice and support in non-crisis situations for the Baltimore, Maryland Jewish community.

The program, hosted by Faygie Schwartz, also featured a special showing of Jewish ceremonial art from Israel, presented by Rachel Weinstock of the Rimonim Gallery of Toronto.

Members of the program committee responsible for bringing the evening together were: Barbara Abrams, Laya Juda, Carol Kassel, Jeanette Massouda, Judy Scheininger, Judy Sigler, Faygie Schwartz, Joan Stevens and Didi Urbach.

By the way, Dr. Weisebord's topic was headed "Women as Givers: Can They be Getters Too?" We'll explain next week.

You can add four more names to the big group that was listed as the participants in the first of this season's B'nai Brith/Synagogue Monday night telethons.

Last week, in addition to many of those mentioned earlier, Moe Freedman, Sam Horowitz, Jack Steinmetz and Wilfred Yaphe came out for an evening on the telpehones.

Debbie Milstein, Young Executives & Professionals chairman, has an intriguing evening coming up for her group and any others who would be interested.

Featured will be psychiatrist Dr. Sol J. Goldstein, whose topic will be — are you ready — "The Guilt Trip." We trust he will at long last discard the dreary "Jewish mother" myth and lay it to rest.

We're only guessing, actually, since we haven't a clue about where Dr. Goldstein is going with his theme. It should be a fascinating evening in any case.

The date is Sunday, November 13, at 7 p.m. in the Lipa Green Building, Fourth Floor. Couvert is $7 per person. To reserve, call 635-2883, ext. 190.

While we're on the subject of "trips", we can assure you there was no guilt whatsoever involved on the part of any of the more than 50 participants who took a day off to see Washington as can only be arranged through a UJA mission.

Led this year by Bill Kassel and Paul Slavens, this unique trip — the fourth in as many years — was particularly topical. With imminent elections on the horizon in Canada, United States and Israel, there were many issues to be addressed with regard to Israel's security and subtle policy changes that may or may not come about with new administrations.

In a briefing at the Israeli Embassy, the group was informed that the primary issue of concern to voters in the Jewish state was the "Palestinian problem." The expanded army duty this has meant for so many, is a terrible drain on family life as well as the economy.

Mark Talisman, director of the Washington Action Office of the Council of Jewish Federations, stated that there had been 1,651 missions to Washington coming from Jewish communities all over the country. He ought to know, he initiated the concept a number of years ago.

He sees this particular type of mission benefitting communities, serving as an entree into Jewish communal life and as a means of becoming informed and involved.

An interesting point brought up by Talisman was that Israel was one of two nations (the other is Norway) to honor its debts to the U.S.

Most timely was a briefing from an official of AIPAC (American Israel Public Affairs Committee) just days before the airing of the 60 Minutes Mike Wallace segment on the organization.

A visit to the new Holocaust Children's Memorial proved to be an unforgettably moving experience in a full day of highlights.

Thanks to the generosity of firms like Cooper's Iron and Metal, House of Metals and Ingot Metal, the first major event for the Heavy Industry & Metals Division in many years was made possible at no cost to the 50 guests.

It was a dinner held in the Trillium Room of the Inn on the Park, with Eddie Greenspan, celebrated criminal lawyer, the special guest.

It was truly a meeting of the generations as fathers and sons who are in the scrap metal business, came together for a festive evening on behalf of UJA.

There will be a full story in next week's edition.

War hero predicts more Mideast wars

TORONTO —

Moshe Levy, one of Israel's most highly decorated war heroes strongly believes that Israel's conflicts with her Arab neighbors will continue because "every eight or nine years, someone wants to prove that he can beat us."

Levy fought in 1967, 1970 and 1973, when he was seriously wounded and lost his right arm. His father fought in the War of Independence and was killed in 1956.

Levy spoke at a cocktail reception held to announce the Alan and Rosalyn Cherry project on behalf of the surgical operating theatre services unit at Shaare Zedek Medical Centre in Jerusalem.

He told of some of his experiences in battle and as a patient at Shaare Zedek as a result of his injuries.

During Levy's recovery, as he wandered through the hospital, he noted other soldiers, burn victims, "lined up for treatment like you line up for a movie. One of them died while waiting — all because the hospital didn't have more than one lousy $25,000 machine."

The surgical operating theatre services unit is part of the hospital's emergency services department. Its facilities are used for all types of military and civilian emergencies.

Alan Cherry explained how he and his wife became involved with Shaare Zedek and of the high regard in which they hold the staff, working under extreme hardship in order to provide quality medical care.

He and his wife will be presenting a fashion show to raise funds for the unit on Thursday evening, Nov. 10 at the Sheraton Centre Hotel. As a special feature, a musical concert will also be staged.

Levy was a guest of then-Israel Prime Minister Menachem Begin when he made his historic trip to Egypt to meet with President Anwar Sadat. When the president asked him the number of wars in which he fought and the number of Egyptian soldiers he had killed, Levy answered that he wasn't a killer - he and the other Israeli soldiers were only protecting their country.

He then told the president that he had a 9-year old son and that he wanted him to cross the border with Egypt only with a camera and not a gun.

Levy commended the many non-Jews at the gathering, saying that Jews have an obligation to support Israel but that others do it by choice and that this is even more commendable. Both he and Alan Cherry stressed that at Shaare Zedek, all patients are treated equally, regardless of their race or religion.

During the evening, Rabbi David Monson recited a prayer for the quick recovery of Levy's wife, Suzanne, who had been rushed to the hospital for surgery the day prior to the gathering. However, she insisted that he attend because it was for the benefit of Israel.

Now living in the U.S. on special assignment for the Israeli government, he came to Toronto to present his talk and returned to New York immediately thereafter.

Louis Zelfman served as chairman of the evening. He urged everyone to attend the fashion show.

In recognition of his special support for Shaare Zedek and his commitment to fund the Surgical Unit, Cherry was presented with the 1987 Jerusalem Award last fall in Jerusalem by the hospital's International Board of Governors. The board was represented at the reception by Morris Talansky of New York, executive vice-chairman.

During his remarks, Talansky, stated that the Israeli conflict with the Arabs is a result of the latters' wish to "delegitimize the Israelis. What greater insult is there to a people than to tell them they are illegitimate?

For information on the Nov. 10 fashion show, call 781-3584.

Holocaust had little influence

Canada's policies debunked

By
ANCIL KASHETSKY

TORONTO —
The Holocaust did not have a positive influence on how Canada dealt with Jewish issues, says David Bercuson, professor of History at the University of Calgary and author of several books on Jewish history and Israel.

"Canada was no less an anti-semitic country during the first few years after World War II than it was in the 1930s before the war," Bercuson recently told an overflow crowd at Holy Blossom Temple at the opening lecture series "The Holocaust in Perspective 50 Years After Crystal Night."

Speaking on the topic, The Holocaust and Canada, Bercuson said that contrary to popular belief, Canada was not pro-Zionist during Israel's fight for independence in 1948. Nor, he added, did the restrictive immigration laws which kept Jews out of Canada in the 1930s appreciably change in the first years following the war.

"When change in immigration came, it wasn't because of the Holocaust, but from a changed conception of what this country should be like after the war," said Bercuson.

It is a myth that the Holocaust marked a change in how Canada regarded Jews," he remarked, and a myth as well that this country supported the creation of Israel "because of guilt for what had happened to Jews during the war."

"We lose sight of the fact there was no hard policy changes regarding Jewish issues because Canada was not responsible for the death of Jews," Bercuson said. "Canadian Jews, aside from servicemen killed in the Allied Cause, were not murdered here or elsewhere."

Consequently, there is a dichotomy in Canada between the way Jews regard the Holocaust and the way non-Jews look at it, he explained. "On one hand Jews here were traumatized by events in Europe while the vast majority of Canadians, though aware of what happened, are not intellectually or emotionally affected."

According to Bercuson this dichotomy is often evident when it comes to matters relating to Israel and its security. In fact, there is strong evidence to show that Canada was hostile to the emergence of statehood in Israel right after the war, he explained.

Bercuson supported his remarks about Canada's less than friendly attitude toward Israel during its founding by citing editorials, opinion polls and making references to official government policy at the time.

"To understand Canada's attitude to Israel during the years of its struggle for independence, particularly in 1948, we must remember that in the late 40s Canada was a very British country."

Opinion here turned against Israel especially after the Irgun targeted British soldiers, he noted, adding that editorial comments in many Canadian newspapers became openly anti-semitic at this time.

"Even before the War of Independence, Canada supported Britain's White Paper which restricted Jewish immigration on the basis that the British knew best."

Bercuson said it is myth that Canada was pro-Zionist after the war just because the country voted for partition of Palestine into Jewish and Arab states at the UN in 1947. "Israel was created as the least lousy solution to the Arab-Jewish conflict."

Bercuson expressed harsh statements about Canada's immigration policies which restricted Jewish immigration before, during and immediately after the war.

"It was known by December, 1942, that Germany was systematically murdering the Jewish people, but this had no impact on Jewish immigration to this country."

The book None is Too Many by Harold Troper and Irving Abella documents this very well, he said, explaining that Jewish efforts to escape Europe met with no success here because of the policy of favoring immigrants of Northern European origin, the Depression and endemic anti-semitism.

"Given this situation, as well the emergence of fascist groups riding the wave of fascism in vogue at the time, the atmosphere in Canada was not conducive to bringing Jews here," he noted.

Bercuson said that when the doors of immigration were finally opened to the Jews in the late 1940s and early 1950s, it was because the country needed skilled immigrants to build the country. "The impetus didn't come from liberalism or humanitarianism, but from the need to create a higher standard of living here."

Looking at the situation today, he said that anti-semitism has decreased considerably since the 1940s and early 50s, due in large part to the changing ethnic character of Canada and the emergence of multiculturalism, but not because of the Holocaust.

One hopeful sign, he added, was the rise in Holocaust education programs in Canadian classrooms and the effort to bring Nazi war criminals to justice.

Post-mastectomy treatments rising

By BEN ROSE

TORONTO —
Partial mastectomy, rather than total mastectomy, followed by easy-to-take radiotherapy with no side effects, is by far the most popular way of treating breast cancer in Canada, says a Montreal cancer specialist.

Fifteen or 20 years ago, 85 to 90% of women with breast cancer were subject to radical surgery (total mastectomy) with no follow-up of any kind. This number has dropped dramatically, said Dr. Richard Margolese, president of the National Cancer Institute, and director of the division of oncology at the Jewish General Hospital in Montreal.

He said it now appears that all women who have surgery for breast cancer can benefit from some kind of follow-up, whether radiotherapy or chemotherapy.

"It's easier to put out a small fire than a big fire," Margolese said in explaining the efficacy of treatment after surgery to deal with remaining cancer cells.

The doctor was speaking to the 9th annual Science symposium sponsored by the Canadian Cancer Society at the Delta Chelsea Inn.

Young women who are pre-menopausal have double the chance to avoid recurrence or death following breast cancer surgery than older women, he said.

Though breast cancer is expected to cause 4,600 deaths in 1988, making it the chief cause of cancer deaths in Canada, Margolese said in the next decade the improvements in treatment may cut the death toll.

"There is a misconception that there is a sea of carcinogens (cancer causing agents) and that we're all melting into it," he said. "That's not true. Cancer of the cervix has gone down, cancer of the colon is dropping slightly, and cancer of the stomach has gone down significantly."

An excess of fat intake in the diet appears to be related to the high incidence of breast cancer, heart disease, colon cancer and prostate cancer in North America compared with a lower incidence in Japan where less fat is eaten, he said. But much research on this possible connection remains to be done.

"Esophageal cancer and stomach cancer is very high in Japan. Is it because they charbroil their food?"

Margolese described as a "breakthrough" research showing the existence of oncogenes, a genetic material on the surface of the cell acting as a repair mechanism. He likened it to the action of a toggle switch moving in either direction.

"We've opened the black box, it's very exciting, but the more we understand the more complex it is. We're on track to a basic understanding of the cancer process," he said.

Describing it as "highly speculative and not proven," Dr. Margolese said there is a theory that food additives, the chemicals which prevent food from going rancid, are responsible for the drop in stomach cancer cases. "It may be not all additives are bad."

Margolese said it is difficult to get control of the additive problem because 20,000 food choices are now available in North America and 1,000 new products are coming on the market every year.

CCCJ receives Ontario grant

TORONTO —
The Canadian Council of Christians and Jews has received a $10,000 grant to hold its Ontario training program in youth and race in March, provincial Citizenship Minister Gerry Phillips recently announced.

The workshops for high school students will focus on the effects of racial prejudice on people, schools and institutions. Through role playing, students will be asked to find solutions to end racial and religious prejudice.

"These seminars will go a long way in building positive race relations attitudes," Phillips said. "I am particularly impressed that the council will ask students who attend the workshops to set up groups in their schools and to apply what they have learned in their everyday life."

Profs urge intifada policy

TORONTO —

Israel's next government, regardless of political outlook, must come up with a firm policy on the intifada, two Ben-Gurion University faculty members recently told a BGU Associates meeting here.

Dr. Esther Leiberman, a pediatrician in the department of health sciences and Dr. David Newman, a geographer in the department of humanities and social sciences, said neither a Likud nor a Labor administration can afford to put off decisions but must draw up a plan of action for the West Bank and the Gaza.

"The result of the intifada for both the right and left wing," Newman said, "is that people realize that you have to adopt some form of very definite policy, rather than leave things for tomorrow and next year or 10 years or 20 years."

He has written extensively on West Bank policies and settlement.

On a different note, Leiberman expressed her hope the next government would make good on David Ben-Gurion's dream of harnessing the Negev's potential.

During the business portion of the meeting, Torontonians Bruce Bronfman and Dr. Mark Sager were appointed chairmen of the program and nominating committees, respectively.

The Associates is planning a mission to the university to coincide with the board of governors meeting in Beersheba in May of next year.

Race relations project begun

TORONTO —

The Ontario government has introduced a new $500,000 program which it says will support innovative community-based race relations projects.

The ministry of citizenship's race relations project grants program will help fund initiatives by non-profit community organizations, municipalities, school boards, as well as native groups for race relations projects.

"Through this program, community organizations and municipal organizations will help ensure, along with this government that everyone is treated equally and fairly in this province," said Gerry Phillips, minister in charge of the program.

Projects in the first category may receive up to 80% of eligible costs to a maximum of $10,000, projects in the other categories may recieve up to 80% of eligible costs to a maximum of $35,000.

Phillips said that race relations project initiatives of three types will be eligible for funding including public education activities such as conferences, exhibitions, displays and workshops; policy and program development for institutions including guidelines for the handling of racial incidents, and projects to reduce racial tensions and conflicts.

Applications will be available in race relations field offices in Hamilton, Kenora, Kingston, London, Ottawa, Sudbury, Toronto and Windsor.

Application forms may also be obtained from the ministry's regional services and native community branch offices throughout Ontario.

Kayfetz sees many ways of being Jewish today

By BRIAN HENRY

TORONTO —

"Once there was only hallacha, only one way of being Jewish," says Ben Kayfetz. Now, he went on, there are many ways, and the next generation will be different again.

"I don't know if we'll recognize their Yiddishkeit" — their Jewish culture.

Kayfetz, the now-retired former director of community relations for the Canadian Jewish Congress, made his remarks in a talk on Internal Jewish Multiculturalism at a recent meeting of the Zionist Spark, a newly formed study and social group.

Kayfetz drew contrasts between the past and present in Canada's Jewish community. "Forty years ago," said Kayfetz, "Orthodox Judaism would have been voted least likely to succeed . . . Today, many consider the Othodox the most solidly based segment of the community."

Kayfetz also singled out the chassidim as a group that has gained strength. In his youth, said Kayfetz, there was only one chassidic dynasty in Toronto. "Today it's like Heinz — 57 varieties."

The baalei teshuva are new phenomena, said Kayfetz, in many cases, he noted, these young people are not actually returning to an Orthodox practice. Often they are Jews with little religious background. Rather, the baalei teshiva are "anxious to assume a burden a previous generation was only too eager to throw off."

Kayfetz also remarked on some changes in the Jewish ideological scene. "The 1920s and 40s were the heyday of Jewish ideologies," he said. There were the Zionists, the non-Zionist socialists — the Bundists — and on the far left, the Communists.

Today, the non-Zionist left has declined greatly, Kayfetz said, and their fraternal organizations, too. "The Communists have taken an even bigger beating," he said, because of the Soviet Union's shocking record vis a vis its Jewish community. "It is a story of total disillusionment."

Kayfetz also remarked on the Jewish community's ethnic diversity. Kayfetz noted that before the war, almost all Canadian Jews were of East European origin. "Then after the 1956 Hungarian revolution, we had some Hungarian Jewish immigration." These newcomers spoke Magyar.

"After 1948, when France moved out of North Africa, we became host to many Shepardic Jews." And today, Kayfetz went on, Canada is host to small colonies of Jews from India, Iraq, Israel, the Soviet Union and so on.

"All these various ideological movements, are they equally valid?" Kayfetz asked. "If they contribute to Jewish chaim, to Jewish life, they are . . . But that's not my last word on the subject."

Ottawa JNF to fete Smith

OTTAWA —

The Jewish National Fund says that when it comes to "Jewish activism, hands-on commitment, and involvement in the wide spectrum of Jewish causes," there is probably no one who can outdo this city's Jack Smith.

That is why the JNF of Ottawa has chosen Smith as its Nov. 9 Negev Dinner honoree at the Jewish Community Centre, the organization stated.

JNF noted that Smith, a 57-year-old Ottawa native, has long projected a larger than life image, with his "cherubic visage and perpetual good humor."

Smith's Jewish activism has reaffirmed the image and made him a natural choice, said JNF Eastern Region director Iris Britan.

She expected a capacity turnout for the event. "Most clearly Jack Smith, by his deep participation in Jewish projects in Canada, fulfills the criteria through which Negev Dinner honorees are selected. We are proud to have him as this year's choice," she said.

Smith's keenest interest, JNF said, has been Camp B'nai B'rith IVOW (Israeli Victims of War) program, which sends 100 children who have lost fathers in combat to summer camp annually.

The program was launched in 1982 by Montrealer Morris Borek, IVOW's president, and JNF special emissary Lt.-Col. Yaacov Perez.

Through Smith's involvement, several youngsters spent this past summer in Ottawa. Camp B'nai B'rith executive Penny Meshwork called Smith's selection a "perfect choice."

Smith's activities in the community include three terms as B'nai B'rith Ottawa Lodge president; 20 years on the executive of Congregation Machzikei Hadas; the congregation's Israel Bonds chairman; and involvement in the Kidney Foundation of Canada and Canadian Diabetes Association. He is presently the incoming chairman of Camp B'nai B'rith.

Professionally, Smith owns Jack Smith Kosher Catering.

Proceeds from the dinner will be directed to the continuing development of JNF's Redeemers of Jerusalem Project, intended to "clothe a united Jerusalem in a mantle of greenery."

Reinforcing culture, identity of French-speaking Jews

BB's La Fraternite head sees vital role for lodge

By
ANCIL KASHETSKY

TORONTO —

Aldo Morais wants to strengthen B'nai B'rith Canada's La Fraternite Lodge 2512 because he believes the organization can reinforce the identity and culture of this city's French-speaking Jews, especially the younger generation.

Morais was recently elected president of the fraternity, which has the distinction of being the only French-speaking lodge in Toronto. The Toronto businessman says he wants to attract more children of French-speaking immigrants so they won't forget the culture and language of their parents.

"Many children of these immigrants don't have French," he said, "and I believe the French language must be kept alive and passed on."

Morais remarked with irony that La Fraternite was formed back in 1964 by newly arrived French speaking immigrants to Toronto primarily to aid them in assimilating into the English-speaking community. "Todays's generation, especially the children, are perhaps too much assimilated and need the lodge to reconnect to their cultural and linguistic origins."

There are currently 50 members of the fraternity, he noted, and as many as 150 "friends" who attend various yearly functions such as parties, lectures, meetings and other special events, all of which are conducted in French.

Looking back on the accomplishments of the lodge, Morais declares with pride that the organization is now a well-heeled one here in the city. Sharing one thing in common - namely the French language — the original members came from Egypt, Morocco, Tunisia, Romania, Israel, France, Belgium, Poland and even Zaire, he said.

"Many of them came to Canada with only a few possessions and barely speaking English. They worked hard, established themselves here and raised children, many of whom are now professionals."

Fought as partisans

Many of them also distinguished themselves in World War II, some having fought as partisans against the Nazis, while others served in various Allied armies, Morais noted.

This, he believes, accounts for the lodge's concern for human rights over the years, adding that it helped some of the "boat people" who came to Canada 15 years ago.

Morais said commitment to Israel is another cornerstone of La Fraternite, which during the recent unrest has actively defended the Jewish state against the criticism of the press.

To reinforce their relationship to Israel, Morais said the lodge is making plans to set up a young adult exchange program between the two countries. "This way young people from Israel and Canada can experience life outside their own country."

However, there is a price tag attached to this project, he said, so the lodge, with the help of the Eglinton West Merchants Association, of which Morais is also chairman, recently held a garage sale which raised around $1,000.

"It's about $1,000 short of our goal, but it will help pay some of the expenses of the project."

With a membership fee of $50 annually, Morais extends a welcome to all French-speaking Jews here in Toronto to join the organization, as well as to any non-French speaking person who would like to learn the language.

Next month Irving Abella, historian and co-author of the book None is Too Many, will speak at the lodge. More information about this event or about the organization can be obtained by phoning Aldo Morais at 781-1322 during the day or 225-3564 in the evening.

Book Fair expected to be huge success

By CAROLYN
BLACKMAN

TORONTO —

With the Jewish Community Centre's 12th annual Book Fair just around the corner, organizers predict the same huge success they've enjoyed in the past.

"We've always had tremendous public response and this year is no different," says Helen Redner, fair director.

She says the book fair committee has been "hard at work for many months ordering books, booking speakers and planning displays. With this year's total at 12,000 books the fair promises to be the biggest yet."

Since its inception, the community has flocked to the fair to hear lectures by such noted autors as Isaac Bashevis Singer, Chaim Potok and Elie Wiesel. "All of this year's speakers have recently published books. The response has been so tremendous some speakers have already sold out," says Redner.

Speakers at this year's fair include Moshe Safdie, Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut, Eddie Goodman, Saul Rubinek, Benjamin and Rachel Schlesinger and Fredelle Bruser Maynard.

Asked how the public's taste in books has changed over the years Redner says it is "impossible to tell from this fair. Our books, many of which have at least some Jewish content or a Jewish author, cover the whole spectrum from books on history, religion and science to novels, cookbooks, children's books and all types of reference books. "There is a book for everyone and because they all sell, it is hard to pinpoint favorites."

This year's fair is running from Nov. 13-20 at the northern branch of JCC. Admission to the book sale and some speakers is free. For information on reserved ticket lectures call the Book Fair office at 636-1880, ext. 273.

NCSY gives teens more appreciation of heritage

By
LEILA SPEISMAN

TORONTO —

A storefront in the Bathurst-Baycrest area which is the new Toronto home of the National Conference of Synagogue Youth (NCSY) and its parent body, the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, is bursting at the seams.

"We have been so successful in the few months we have been open," reports a pleased Lawrence Cherniak, regional vice-president of the Orthodox Union, "that we have already given notice to rent more space."

NCSY, regional executive-director Rabbi Nosson Westreich told The CJN, aims "to give teenagers a greater appreciation of their heritage through informal Jewish education."

The main thrust up to now in Toronto has been in synagogue chapters (there are five in Toronto — including a Sephardi one — and 15 in Ontario and Quebec), as well as through its Free Torah High School. Recently hired program coordinator Ralph Tammam will help in the extensive and innovative programming that will be possible in the permanent facility.

Cherniak and Westreich are most excited about the drop-in centre they see the office as becoming. "It will be a place for high school kids to drop their hat," said Westreich, "a place to relax after school and on weekends."

The Anbar Lending Library and a media centre will be open soon and will be available to them, as well as educational programs, social action opportunities, counselling by professional staff and resource people, and Shabbat programs.

Around exam time, Westreich plans to run "resource evenings," open study times, when tutorial help will be available in both religious and secular subjects, "from Talmud to trigonometry."

A Wednesday evening Kollel program offers over 30 university students advanced lectures and classes on religious subjects.

Tammam has been active in outreach programs in smaller communities, such as London, Oshawa, Kingston and Kitchener. Rabbi David Levy has assumed a part-time position as program coordinator in Montreal.

NCSY, said Westreich, also has special programs for the deaf and for disabled youngsters.

The office will also be "the clearing house for Orthodox Union activity in Eastern Canada," Cherniak said. The Anbar Library will carry all their publications, and will be a resource centre on shul administration and fund raising.

As well, member synagogues can telephone 782-4426 to reach any Orthodox Union service offered by the New York head office, such as kashruth or kashruth certificate information, marriage counselling and synagogue leadership services.

A recent innovation that Cherniak considers "historic" was the inaugural meeting of the first Orthodox Union board in Canada. It was attended by Cherniak, Westreich, David Woolf, regional chairman of NCSY, and representatives of Orthodox synagogues in Toronto, Hamilton and Thornhill.

The board, said Cherniak, is envisioned as "the lay spokesman for the Orthodox community."

The board is already planning a May retreat in Collingwood and a seminar for orthodox lawyers dealing with such halachic issues as Shabbat closing-Sunday opening, the wearing of kippot in the workplace, and Jewish divorce.

They have also begun having lectures for adults, and hope to expand this activity.

A major highlight of their current activities is planning for their Chai Dinner to take place Tuesday, Nov. 22, at Beth Avraham Yoseph Synagogue in Thornhill. Cherniak said that the dinner will both celebrate 18 years of NCSY activity in Canada, and raise funds to assist and endow the centre's renovation, furnishing and programming.

Special honorees will be Joseph Tanenbaum, Fran and David Woolf, brothers Mordechai Ambar and Simon and Ouzi Anbar, and Hamilton Rabbi Morton Green.

"The emphasis will be on having a light, entertaining evening," promised Cherniak, with short speeches, a slide presentation, and music by a harp and flute.

For further information about NCSY, the Orthodox Union or the dinner, telephone 782-4426.

Jewish Liberal contesting affluent Winnipeg riding

By MYRON LOVE

WINNIPEG —
The federal riding of Winnipeg South (which includes Tuxedo, one of the city's most affluent areas, with a Jewish population of 1,750) had long been represented by right-wing Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament Dan Mackenzie.

Picking up the retiring Mackenzie's PC standard is Dorothy Dobbie, president of Association Communications (a publishing firm) past president of the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce and founding president of Winnipeg AM, an organization formed in 1978 to promote Winnipeg.

Challenging Dobbie are Liberal Allan Kaufman, a Winnipeg-born law professor and former aide ro Robert Kaplan, and Len Van Roon, a letterr carrier and labor union activist representing the NDP.

Although his chances of winning are minimal, Van Roon is running because he is opposed to the concept of super mailboxes, which he sees as a symbol of the Mulroney Government's "hidden agenda" and he wants to promote discussion of the proposed free trade deal which he and the NDP oppose in its present form.

Allan Kaufman

"I have researched free trade for three years as a member of the Manitoba Federation of Labour's technical change committee," he said. "I am concerned about the simplicity with which the deal is being viewed."

Dorothy Dobbie agrees with Van Roon in terms of the "misinformation glut" surrounding the free trade issue. "There will be little impact locally immediately," she said. "In the long term though, it will free markets and remove economic barriers. It only deals with a quarter of the goods and services that flow across the border.

"Employment will rise and prices will drop. Other countries would give their eye teeth for this sort of deal with the biggest market in the world."

Dobbie is more concerned with regional disparity and working to ensure Manitoba and other smaller provinces receive their fair share of the nation's wealth and opportunity.

Allan Kaufman is also concerned about Manitoba getting its fair share of economic opportunity. "I think the Jewish community is concerned about the exodus of its young people to Toronto and elsewhere. We can't afford to have contracts like the CF-18 taken away. It signals to private enterprise that the federal government isn't interested in Winnipeg."

In issues of more specific concern to the Jewish community, Kaufman is better versed than his opponents. On the question of Jim Keegstra and the whole matter of freedom of speech, Kaufman states that society has the right to suppress views which encourage hatred against other religious and ethnic groups.

While Van Roon "deplores" what Keegstra did as an educator, he considers the question of where to draw the line a difficult one which requires more research on his part.

Dobbie considers freedom of speech a privilege which should not be abused. "The laws should be tightened if they need tightening," she said.

On the Deschenes Commission and Nazi war criminals, Kaufman regrets the government foreclosed the extradition option. "Both options — trial here and extradition to Israel, West Germany or elsewhere — should be open to speed the process," he said. "I don't think the current government can stomach prosecutions, but it's a moral imperative."

Kaufman sees no problem with evidence from East Bloc countries as long as Canadian interpreters are on hand and it fits Canadian legal rules of evidence.

Van Roon sees the issue as a "clear historic wrong" committed by the Canadian government in allowing Nazis in in the first place. He is talking to Jewish and Ukrainian friends to better determine the public pulse on the subject and understand the depth of feeling.

Dobbie doesn't think these cases should be tried in Canada but she says she can see why some groups would prefer trial here with our more lenient approach.

Dobbie sees the recent relationship between Canada and Israel as "cool," adding that she hopes "there will be improved communication over the next four years."

"Canada should be a strong supporter of Israel," said Kaufman. "Joe Clark speaking to the Canada Israel Committee failed to see that the problem is the Arabs still not coming to terms with the existence of the State of Israel."

Van Roon is trying to become better informed on the issues through contacts in the Jewish community.

Both Van Roon, a member of Amnesty International, and Kaufman believe pressure on the Soviet Union to allow its Jewish citizens to leave should be maintained in spite of the more lenient climate. Dobbie would like to see Canada promoting more immigration worldwide in general. "Canada has benefitted immensely from its Jewish population for example," she said.

Hees praises Oostrom, free trade at fund raiser

By JEFF ROSEN

TORONTO —
Canada's social security system will not be affected by the free trade deal with the U.S., says George Hees, federal minister of veterans affairs.

Hees defended the treaty before a partisan audience at a fund raising reception for Willowdale MP John Oostrom, saying that Canada's free trade stand will not endanger anything it produces or believes in.

George Hees

"It will broaden the market in the U.S. for Canadian producers who are just as smart or smarter than our American competitors," Hees told his fellow Tories. Among the crowd of 150 was Rabbi David Monson and members of the Gen. Wingate Branch of the Royal Canadian Legion.

"What this deal will do is enlarge our market for Canadians and make more sales and more jobs and make life better for Canadians," added the MP for Northumberland who recently announced his retirement from politics.

Hees paid tribute to Mulroney, calling him the best leader he has seen in the Canadian Parliament during his 38 years as an MP.

He also paid tribute to Oostrom, saying he is one of the most respected members in Parliament and predicted that Oostrom will soon be a cabinet minister.

Oostrom in turn paid tribute to his "mentor" who taught him how to carry on after a few unsuccessful runs for Parliament. He also admitted to a tough race in Willowdale against former riding MP Jim Peterson, saying that the "troops from Queen's Park are out there putting up signs." (Jim Peterson's brother is Ontario Premier David Peterson.).

Hees was first elected to the House of Commons in a byelection in 1950 in a Toronto riding. In 1953 he was elected in Northumberland and has held the seat ever since.

In his almost four decades of service, Hees has served in a number of cabinet positions including minister of transport, minister of trade and commerce in the John Diefenbaker administration and as minister of veterans affairs and as the first minister of state for senior citizens under Prime Minister Mulroney.

Dorfman heads Horse Guards

By BEN ROSE

TORONTO —
Twenty-six years ago a 16-year-old student at Upper Canada College got a lift home from a man in the uniform of the Canadian militia. Three days after his 17th birthday when he became eligible, that high school student, impressed by what he had been told, joined the militia himself.

Recently Lieut.-Col. Jeffrey Dorfman, 43, became the first Jewish commanding officer of the Governor-General's Horse Guards.

Dorfman, proprietor of Katz Delicatessen and Corned Beef Emporium, 3222 Dufferin St., says he has never regretted the time he spent training with the famed unit.

As commanding officer he is automatically a part-time aide de camp to the Governor-General Jeanne Sauve.

Dorfman enlisted as a private in 1962 and worked his way up through the ranks. As the Regimental Sergeant Major, he was the senior non-commissioned officer and personal advisor to the commanding officer on affairs of the men under him.

Next followed promotion to district sergeant-major for Toronto, the largest militia unit in Canada.

Then to captain and major and on the eve of his assuming command, to lieutenant-colonel.

Election Update

Eglinton-Lawrence now has fewer Jews

New, former Liberals battle over Toronto riding

By
BELINDA SILBERMAN

TORONTO —
New boundaries for the federal riding of Eglinton-Lawrence have resulted in a smaller concentration of Jews in the area, says the riding's assistant returning officer.

In the last election, the riding was almost half-Jewish and half-Italian, but changes have resulted in a more ethnic mix, Peter Gentile says.

Part of the area — Yonge St. south of the North York city limits — has been moved into the St. Paul riding, while officials have added a region on Keele St. south of Eglinton Ave. W.

The newly formed riding — almost a gun shape — boasts a population of more than 98,360, with about 52,500 eligible voters, Gentile says.

The Jewish population — mainly concentrated in the Bathurst St.-Avenue Rd. area down to Hillhurst Blvd. — is estimated to be about 11,060, or about 11% of the total riding.

The electoral race is primarily between the three major party candidates — Progressive Conservative Tony Abbott, New Democrat Vittoria Levi, and Liberal Joseph Volpe.

Tony Abbott

Vittoria Levi

Joseph Volpe

Tony Abbott. This 57-year-old commercial lawyer-businessman agrees with the Alberta move to appeal the case of Jim Keegstra, who is charged with promoting hatred against Jews, to the Supreme Court of Canada.

If the top court rules the law is invalid because it conflicts with the Charter of Rights, then it should be amended and clarified, Abbott says.

He adds freedom of speech should be the right of all Canadians. But this right is abused when it's used to indict a group of people.

"That crosses the border for abuse of freedom," says the former Mississauga Liberal MP, who was federal consumer and corporate affairs minister in the late 1970s.

Abbott says he agrees with the Deschenes Commission's recommendations that war criminals be tried in Canada. He also thinks evidence from Eastern bloc countries should be included in trials.

"I think (such evidence) is not as easy to get as one might expect. But without it, they won't be able to prosecute as effectively."

Delays in prosecuting war criminals may be due to a lack of sufficient evidence, he says. Witnesses are also becoming more difficult to locate, he adds.

On the more general issue of abortion, Abbott, a father of three and grandfather of four, says he opposes it as a form of birth control and does not believe in abortion on demand.

"I think there should be limitations particularly if the pregnancy is at an advanced stage," he says.

Vittoria Levi. In response to the Keegstra case, Levi says Canada should introduce legislation that will protect ethnic and religious groups from public discrimination.

Levi says there's a "very fine line" between freedom of speech and group slander.

"It's like the right to shout fire in a crowded theatre when there's no fire," says the 49-year-old vocational rehabilitation counsellor and former nurse.

Levi agrees with the Deschenes Commission's call for prosecuting war criminals. Such prosecutions are needed to help alleviate the pain and suffering experienced by many Jews, and to restore people's faith in organized law, she says.

Levi also believes evidence should be accepted from Eastern Bloc countries.

"All evidence should be investigated from every point of view," she says.

Levi, who despite her name is not Jewish says she doesn't understand why there has been a delay in prosecutions.

"I can only express the feeling that the Conservatives are floundering or maybe they're overwhelmed by the issues.

"I feel strongly for the right of individuals to decide what is right for them," says Levi, a former executive director of Microchip Youth Training Association of Toronto.

Joseph Volpe. Responding to the Keegstra case, Volpe, like Levi, says there is a "fine line" between freedom of speech and group slander.

Freedom of speech stops when it brings a group of people into sharp focus, attacking and degenerating it or elements of it, says the 41-year-old high school vice-principal, who works for the Metropolitan Separate School Board.

Volpe, a father of four, says he would like to see legislation that prohibits hate literature.

Volpe, who agrees with the Deschenes Commission's recommendations, says political will is needed to initiate prosecutions in Canada of war criminals.

"What's the point of spending all that time and money and all that energy (on the commission), if you're not going to act on it?" he asks.

Volpe says evidence should be accepted from Eastern bloc countries, but, like other evidence, it should be tested.

Volpe says he is against abortion as a means of birth control. Those seeking abortions are often career-oriented women in their mid- to late-20s who decide "now's not the time" to have a baby, he says.

Young people should be educated on contraception, says Volpe, who would like to see an early definition for life rather than a later one.

Volpe — who recognizes people in his riding want someone with a balanced view on the issue — adds there are occasions when abortion may be acceptable, including cases of carnal violence and when a pregnancy may threaten the mother's life.

Grit bows out of race

TORONTO —
Dr. Emmanuel Feuerwerker, Liberal candidate in Etobicoke-Lakeshore has withdrawn from the Nov. 21 election leaving the party without a candidate in the area.

The Orthodox Jewish candidate officially pulled out of the race for health reasons, according to a report in the Toronto Star.

Former Speaker backs Deschenes' recommendations

Bosley does battle in Don Valley West riding

By
BELINDA SILBERMAN

TORONTO —
The battle is on in the federal riding of Don Valley West as three key candidates vie for the winner's circle on election day.

The prize — an affluent brisket-shaped riding with a population of about 95,000, including about 65,000 eligible voters.

The area — which includes Leaside, Thorncliffe Park, Hogg's Hollow and the Bridal Path — is also home to about 8,210 Jews, who mainly live in the riding's Bayview Ave. region of North York, says Marcia Zalev, the riding's returning officer.

Jews make up almost 9% of Don Valley West's total population.

While the riding boasts three key contenders, at least four others hope to raise fisticuffs in the competition.

John Bosley

Ian Cameron

Liz Yorke

They include Chris Frazer, a 29-year-old youth Communist magazine journalist and editorial writer, who is a candidate for the Communist Party of Canada; Peter Hetherington, a 35-year-old financial consultant, who is running for the Party for the Commonwealth of Canada; J. Michael McCutcheon, a 46-year-old businessman, who is an independent; and Clarke Slemon, a 42-year-old senior research scientist, who is a candidate for the Libertarian Party of Canada.

Here are the key candidates' views on Jewish issues and other matters of concern:

But in terms of accepting evidence from Eastern Bloc countries, he stresses the only evidence that can be used is "that which would be admissable in a Canadian court."

Bosley, incumbent in Don Valley West, doesn't believe the Conservative government has delayed putting the commission's findings into action.

"We have been moving forward on those recommendations," he maintains.

"As far as I know, nothing has delayed implementation of the commission's findings."

Bosley, a member of the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry, also says his government has been "deeply involved" in aiding Soviet Jews.

And as a result of pressure exerted by the Canadian government and others, former leading Refuseniks Ida Nudel and Natan Sharansky were allowed to emigrate, he says.

Bosley, a former Speaker of the House of Commons, believes the Canadian government should continue to exert pressure on a bilaterial and multilaterial basis to help Soviet Jewry.

On the issue of abortion, Bosley says he is pro-choice and against women being jailed for undergoing the procedure.

"I feel the state shouldn't interfere other than to provide counselling to make sure everyone knows what their rights and options are," he says.

"But if in the end the doctor and the woman decide it should be an abortion, then I don't believe it should be a crime to do that."

Ian Cameron. The New Democratic Party has welcomed the results and recommendations of the Deschenes Commission, says the 51-year-old high school economics and history teacher.

He says he and his party oppose the extradition of war criminals to Eastern Bloc countries.

"We feel that we want to make sure that they receive a fair trial and the evidence is presented so they can be brought to justice," says Cameron, a former elected counsellor for Kearney near his cottage in Northern Ontario.

He also says he supports the commission's recommendations for inclusion of evidence from Eastern Bloc countries in war criminal prosecutions.

Cameron believes a delay in implementing the commission's recommendations may be due to a lack of political will by the government as well as insufficient funding.

As a result, he says he would support providing more funds to the judicial unit responsible for prosecution of war criminals.

The father of two says he would also like to see the government continue to lobby for Soviet Jewry emigration, with family reunification the centrepiece of its policy.

"Canada could be a strong diplomatic force under the Helsinki Accord to ensure the rights of families," he says.

But pressure groups and protests are not enough and "I certainly applaud the fact that Joe Clark recently announced a fund to help Soviet Jews emigrate to Canada and settle," he says.

Cameron also says he's in favor women's right to choose whether or not to have an abortion.

"I have a daughter of my own and I think this is a private moral decision. I don't think this is a decision that the state should take."

"We as a country obviously accepted these alleged war criminals to live here — many have lived here half their lifetime," says Yorke, who works at the Princess Margaret Hospital.

"And because we accepted them, it's now our responsibility to deal with these matters."

Evidence should be accepted from Eastern Bloc countries — as it should from wherever it's available — but it must receive the same scrutiny as evidence here in Canada is given, she says.

Yorke, president of the St. George-St. David Provincial Liberal Association, says the delay in implementing the commission's recommendations may be in the judicial system and "I guess what we have to do is push them a little bit."

War criminals should be prosecuted as soon as possible because Holocaust survivors are getting older and "this is something that needs to be settled," she says.

On the issue of Soviet Jewish emigration, Yorke says she would like to see the Canadian government continue "discussions and negotiations, trying to establish better relations in terms of human rights in general and Soviet Jewry in particular."

Yorke, a member of the Metro Toronto District Health Council, also favors a woman making her own decision when it comes to having an abortion.

"But it has to be a real choice," she asserts. And that includes, men and women having access to education about their bodies and birth control, she says.

There also has to be adequate income maintenance programs and child care for those who opt to have the baby as well as skills education programs for mothers returning to the workforce, she says.

Raffle will finance disabled war vets' visit

TORONTO —
Fund raising will continue to the end of November to help bring over a group of disabled Israeli war veterans for a visit here sometime after Pesach.

"Contibutors will enjoy a hearty kosher meal, get a tax receipt, and take part in a raffle for the $7,200 first prize," said Serge Eisenberg, spokesman for Shaarei Shomayim Congregation's brotherhood. The latter is organizing the visit with Beit HaLochem, Israel's national facility for disabled soldiers.

The veterans' group will consist of about 15 soldiers of various ages, men suffering up to 30% body disability due to war wounds, said Eisenberg.

"We are actually bringing them over, not just hosting them as part of a pre-arranged tour," he said.

Six hundred raffle-dinner tickets are being sold at $125 each to pay for their flight to Canada and other expenses, he said.

"We are looking forward to support from the community at large," said Eisenberg. He noted that this was the first time in some 20 years that the brotherhood's annual charitable draw was being actively extended beyond the congregation.

The veterans will be billeted in private homes during their 2-week stay here, he said.

The raffle-draw and dinner will be held Wednesday evening Nov. 30 at the Shaarei Shomayim. Prizes, including first, total $14,000 in cash.

The dinner, as in previous years, will be "fabulous," says Eisenberg. "Included is wine and a free open bar. It's one dinner per ticket."

Tickets may be purchased to the day of the draw. One practice has been for several past purchasers to divide the cost of a ticket or several tickets among them, while making mutually satisfactory arrangements for each ticket's dinner and $100 tax receipt.

Mac Kenner loved music

A & A co-founder dies

TORONTO — Retired businessman Mac Kenner, whose love of music led him to co-found A & A Records and Tapes on Yonge St., died last month. He was 77.

Outgoing and friendly, Kenner and his wife, Alice, opened the store in 1946 just north of Dundas Ave. He chose the name A & A so that his business would be listed first in the Yellow Pages.

"Music was a part of his life," his daughter, June, a businesswoman, said in an interview.

As a child, Kenner took piano lessons and even continued instruction when he became an adult. He liked to play everything from jazz and classical to popular melodies.

Kenner, from modest beginnings, was born in Toronto to Russian immigrants Harry Kenner, a cap maker, and his wife, Becky, a grocery store owner. He was the youngest of three children.

He worked for 18 years as a telegrapher with CP Rail before entering the record business. At the time of A & A's opening, the only other downtown stores selling records were Eaton's and Heinztman Pianos.

His business soon prospered and years later Kenner claimed to have the largest inventory of any record store in the world. An intense 10-year rivalry began when Sam "the Record Man" Sniderman opened his store next door in 1961.

Kenner sold A & A in 1971, enjoying an active retirement with frequent visits to his farm near Toronto where he spent many leisure-filled hours riding his six pet horses, one of whom was a grandson of the prize-winning racehorse Man of War.

Kenner and his wife — who he met ice skating in Toronto more than a half-century ago — also sold records and books at flea markets, antique and craft shows.

Kenner was a member of the Shaarei Shomayim Congregation, a long-time member of B'nai B'rith Canada's Leonard Mayzel Lodge, a lifetime member of Baycrest Hospital's Auxilliary, and a strong financial supporter of United Jewish Appeal, Ben-Gurion University, and ORT.

Kenner's funeral was held at Benjamin's Park Memorial Chapel. He was buried at Mt. Sinai Cemetary on Wilson Ave.

He is survived by his wife, daughter, three Bornstein grandchildren Mark, 22, Danny, 20, and Sarah, 17, as well as numerous nieces and nephews.

New cuts ahead for universities

JERUSALEM (JPFS) — Israel's universities can expect another $9 million cut in government funds for higher education despite their already difficult financial position, Education Minister Yitzak Navon told a meeting of the Council for Higher Education last week.

He said the move would be a result of proposed cuts in the current state budget. "I have no wonder cure for the situation," he said, but promised to meet with the finance minister to seek a solution.

Prof. Yehuda Ben-Shaul, rector of Tel Aviv University and chairman of the committee of university heads, said he does not see how classes can begin as scheduled when administrative employees are engaged in sanctions and academic staff are threatening to strike.

He said that because of the budget problems faced by the universities, the level of higher education has gone back to what it was 10 years ago.

Members of the council asked the committee of university heads if they should resign, and the committee advised them to do so. They said they would consider the suggestion.

Accidents take huge toll in Israel

TEL AVIV (JTA) — More Israelis have been killed or maimed in traffic accidents than in all of the wars fought in the 40 years of Israel's independence, a traffic safety expert told a Knesset committee last week.

Moshe Becker, of the highway safety centre at the Haifa Technion, informed the committee investigating the accident death toll that more than 16,000 Israelis lost their lives in traffic accidents since the state was founded in 1948, and 90,000 were seriously injured.

The wars fought by Israel have claimed 14,500 lives and left 50,000 wounded.

Israel has one of the highest traffic death per capita rates in the world. There were 493 highway fatalities in the past year alone.

Recently, six members of two families were killed in a head-on collision near Afula.

Good health choices urged for women

By CYNTHIA GASNER

TORONTO —

Can women in our society make healthy choices? What can they do about it both individually and collectively?

These questions were examined by Jessica Hill, an expert in health promotion and women's issues and presently the manager of the Women's Health Bureau in the ministry of health for Ontario, at a symposium presented jointly by the Mount Sinai Hospital Auxiliary and the University of Toronto at OISE.

"One of my basic assumptions is that women have less power in our society today in fields as varied as economics, psychology, sociology, psychology and law," said Hill in her keynote address titled, Making Healthy Choices.

She presented facts to substantiate her statement. Women still earn only 64 cents on average to every $1 earned by men. In 1985, 84% of Canadian women in the paid labor force were congregated in the service sector in traditionally lower paying occupations.

The number of women in the labor force with children under 6 years of age, has risen from 49.5% in 1981 to 62.1% in 1986. That year, there were 290,755 single parent families in Ontario, 82% of these families were led by women. More than half of the single mothers in Canada were living at a level below the poverty line.

Elderly woman face a "double jeopardy" situation — they are poor and live longer than men. And one in four women will be sexually assaulted some time in their lives and one in every eight to ten women, is a battered woman.

Women, as caregivers, says Hill, are the most undervalued workers in terms of financial reward and status in society today. This position does not allow women to develop fully since they are continually torn between caring for others and being responsible for their own choices and personal development.

In terms of making healthy choices for their families, women assume responsibility for all aspects of the family's physical and mental health. Hill notes that a study conducted by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women found that there is no real difference between the share of health care activities of women working outside the home or inside the home.

"Women often spend so much time looking after family health that they're left with little time to attend to their own health — the woman sacrifices her own needs."

She said that women have been led to believe that fostering the growth of others is the only valid role for women. "We must all learn to care for ourselves — women have a right to make healthy choices for themselves as well. "We must learn to stop feeling guilty about looking after ourselves."

She pointed out that another factor in making healthy choices, is the range and complexity of the choices we face. "Modern medical technology and information have both increased and complicated women's choices today."

New technologies are presenting women with very complex moral decisions which generally run contrary to women's ingrained sense of attachment to, and responsibility for others. As well, she adds, the plethora of available and often conflicting different information on health care options, requires women to assimilate findings and make decisions about the best option for them in their individual situation.

"To make healthy choices, we must inform ourselves about our options and the associated risks." She cites amniocentesis, breast cancer screening, calcium, fluoride, estrogen and other controversial issues.

Women require adequate information, knowledge and skills, as well as supportive environmental conditions if they are to make choices for themselves. She suggests that women begin with their own experience, listen to what messages their body gives them, acquire medical information, raise questions with health professionals, weigh and sort out their thoughts and then act.

"We are moving out of a passive stance. Women have played a key role in changing the health care system," says Hill, and she believes they should continue to advocate on their own behalf and on behalf of those they care for.

Levine sees need to control development

Urban planner tries for aldermanic seat in To.

On Nov. 14 voters across Ontario will head to the polls to choose the men and women who will run their regional, town and city councils for the next three years. The CJN will examine a few of these races in the coming issues.

By JEFF ROSEN

TORONTO —
The need to control development in Toronto's downtown core has brought an urban planner who previously worked in the city's planning and development department out of the back rooms into the political process.

Howard Levine, 41, said he decided to contest the aldermanic seat in the City of Toronto's new Ward 14 as he was not happy with what he sees as a lack of proper planning on city council.

Howard Levine

Levine, a resident and homeowner in the ward for the past 14 years, said Toronto council is too pro-development and is too concerned with promoting its image.

"The city should enforce its official plan. Instead it constantly makes deals with developers."

Levine said that in canvassing the area, people are telling him that this lack of proper planning is making Toronto unliveable.

It is also having the effect of causing other problems, he said, such as straining the city's services and causing transportation problems for motorists.

This, in effect, causes motorists personal stress, he added.

What Levine said he would like see implemented is a proper urban design policy to determine the physical makeup of the city.

This includes burying Hydro lines, streetscaping, street lighting, street furniture and pavement design. He suggested an advisory committee be formed comprised of citizens and experts to put forward recommendations as how to make the city look better.

Levine also stressed that council should make no deals with developers.

"We're getting an image of a world class city. However, if world class means Manhattanization, I would prefer if we were not world class."

Levine said the city has to do more to provide affordable housing, which means accepting new ideas and solutions. This includes putting more emphasis on cooperative housing.

More emphasis also has to be put into integrating non-profit senior citizens' housing into the community, he added.

Levine is going up against Michael Gee, current alderman for Ward 11, most of which is outside the boundaries of the new Ward 14.

Despite Gee's 10 years on city council, Levine said he feels he can better serve the needs of the people.

"I'm the incumbent here," said Levine. "I've lived in the Bathurst St. area all my life."

Stutz is running in Ward 15 against incumbent Kay Gardner and Bob Murphy.

VAUGHAN —
In other municipal election news, Vaughan Councillor Michael Di Biase will be running for York Regional council.

Di Biase, who has served as Vaughan councillor for the past three years, said he hopes to move to regional council to have access to a "natural forum" to discuss issues which he feels most strongly about.

These include: stopping a proposal by Metro Toronto council to expand a landfill site in Vaughan; building a cultural centre to serve the area; lobbying Bell Canada to eliminate long distance rates within neighboring muncipalities and marketing the Town of Vaughan to prospective industries.

Direct election changes North York city council

NORTH YORK —
With the introduction of direct election to Metropolitan Toronto council, North York politics will never be the same again.

As a result of changes made by the provincial government, Canada's 5th largest city has lost its board of control and will operate with a reduced council of 14 councillors, down from 19.

While North York's four controllers represented the city on Metro council, voters in North York will now elect their representatives to Metro council.

Voters in North York will choose one Metro councillor from seven electoral districts made up of the 14 city wards.

The ridings are North York Humber, Wards 1 and 2; Black Creek, Wards 3 and 5; North York Spadina, Wards 4 and 7; North York Centre South, Wards 6 and 8; North York Centre, Wards 9 and 11; Don Parkway, Wards 10 and 12, and Seneca Heights, Wards 13 and 14.

The seven councillors elected in these seven ridings will sit on Metro council along with the mayor and councillors elected from other parts of Metro. While the mayors of Metro's six municipalities will all sit on council, each will send a different number of councillors.

The City of Toronto will have eight councillors, Scarborough will have six councillors, Etobicoke will have four councillors on Metro, York will have two and East York will have one.

Unlike past elections when Metro chairman was appointed by Metro and didn't necessarily have to be an elected politician, this time the chairman will first have to be elected in a Metro riding and will have to face voters in each election.

North York voters will also choose their city councillors and board of education trustees in the 14 wards, three members of the Metro Toronto French-language school council, two members of North York Hydro-Electric Commission and, of course, mayor of the city.

For those who will not be able to make it to the polling booth on Nov. 14, advance polls will be set up.

In North York advance polls will be held on Nov. 5 and Nov. 10 from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Special provisions have been made to accommodate every voting trip request on the regular Wheel-Trans service for the advance poll days this year.

Advance polls will be held at St. Judas Separate School, 3251 Weston Rd. for Wards 1 and 3; Maple Leaf Public School, 301 Culford Rd. for Wards 2 and 4; Centennial Centre, 580 Finch Ave. W. for Wards 5 and 7; The Bob Rumball Centre for the Deaf, 2395 Bayview Ave. for Wards 6 and 8; Edithvale Community Centre, 7 Edithvale Ave. for Wards 9 and 11; St. Catherine Separate School, 30 Roanoke Rd. for Wards 10 and 12, and St. Leonard Separate School, 100 Ravel Rd. for Wards 13 and 14.

Maccabi Canada names Lipsett coach

Canuck rugby team eyes medal

By
PAUL LUNGEN

Rugby player Mark Rotman (wearing 7's T-shirt) shakes hands with opponent following recent match, in Ontario Rugby Union action.

TORONTO —
For the first time in a long time, there's going to be some good bodily contact at the Maccabiah Games involving the Canuckskies. And they won't be waltzing with the native girls in a kibbutz dining hall, either.

For the first time since the sport was introduced in 1981, Canada will be fielding a 20-man rugby team at next summer's 13th "bar mitzvah" Maccabiah Games in Israel.

The rugged, hard-nosed athletes Maccabi Canada is sending over aren't going just to participate — they're going to win, says team coach Jake Lipsett.

A soft-spoken man with no hint of the sport's violence in his voice, Lipsett, 39, will lead an aggregation of players which include top level sportsmen.

"We've got a pretty good team," Lipsett told The CJN. "I'm happy with the calibre of players I've seen."

So far, aided by his brother Bob "Red" Lipsett, brother Jake has seen about 70 hopefuls who attended two tryout camps in Toronto. They've winnowed that number down to 32, and the final 20 will be selected following another evaluation camp early next May.

In the meantime, the 32 remaining hopefuls have been told to keep in shape and they've been given certain "fitness standards" they must meet at a follow up evaluation in January.

With the chance of medal looming very real on the horizon, Lipsett doesn't want his charges running out of gas in the torrid Israeli summer heat.

Twenty of the players still in the running for a spot on the team are based in Toronto, so they're used to playing in heat, he noted. One of them, Mark Rotman who plays for Toronto Welsh in the competitive first division of the Ontario Rubgy Union, is a virtual shoo-in to make the team, he said.

Of the remaining hopefuls, three are from Montreal, one each from Ottawa and Calgary and seven from British Columbia, including Evan Scholnich, a strong backfield player with the University of British Columbia who would have to break a leg to miss making the team.

Rugby (or rugger), for those who are not familiar with the intricacies of the sport, resembles football without the helmets and pads. In fact, says Lipsett, it is the forerunner of Canadian and American football and shares many of the same terms.

There are offsides in both games, laterals, field goals and an oval-shaped ball that must be advanced over the opponent's goal line. Carrying the ball over the goal line scores a try (touch down) in rugger, but unlike Canadian football, the player must actually touch the ball down on the field to score 4 points. If he doesn't he can litterally be carried out by opponents, leaving his team with bubkes.

Following successful trys, 2-point converts are kicked through the goal posts, but from a point up the field equidistant from the sidelines from where the ball was touched down.

The ball is advanced to the opponent's goal line by running with it and by lateral passes to teammates. You keep possession until it is taken away by the other team.

As in football, there is a prominent place for big men, most notably in the scrums that start some plays when the ball is thrown in among the mass of beefed up humanity and kicked about to a smaller, fleeter teammates who run with the ball until they're tackled by opponents.

In addition to 4-point trys, a successful drop kick (where the ball must hit the ground before being struck) through the uprights scores three points.

Although the game shares many similarities with football, rugby players must be in better condition to be able to run continually throughout the 80-minute game (divided into two 40-minute halfs), says Lipsett, who played college football with the University of Toronto in the early 70s.

Lipsett, who started his career with the Balmy Beach Rugby Club as a peach-fuzzed 14-year-old, played until he hit 34.

During his career, he was on the Ontario team in inter-provincial competitions and later coached the province's junior team to the finals in national tournaments.

He's also coached rugby in Scarborough high schools for the past 12 years and is a geography coach, er, teacher, when he's not out on the field.

Rugby became a "test sport" at the 1981 Maccabiah Games, says Maccabi Canada official Bernie Offstein, and became a full-fledged "official sport" at the 1985 Games.

Club Modiin, an aggregation of recent arrivals to Israel (mostly from South Africa) won the tournament last time around, defeating Australia for the gold medal.

As of mid-autumn, only Israel, the U.S., Canada and Australia are known entries for the 89 competition, with the possibility of other countries joining later, including Britain.

The tournament will likely be held at the Sportek facility in north Tel Aviv, Offstein added.

Designer creates a Fleury

Company has weathered the times

By
BRUCE PARKINSON

"You just keep your eyes on us," said Michael Waxman, president of Progress Cloak, coat manufacturers for three generations, as he enthused over the new direction his company has taken.

The company has taken on Marielle Fleury, a veteran Quebec outerwear designer who Waxman describes as "in the same design league as (Leo) Chevalier and (Mjchel) Robichaud."

Already looking to diversify and appeal to a better market, Progress was receptive when Fleury approached them about creating a designer line of woven rainwear.

"Her forte has always been outerwear," said Malcolm Citrin, president of Marielle Fleury Designs, the new division of Progress Cloak.

"Many of the big American and European designers do some coats, but they don't understand them well enough. Fleury is a designer of coats and a connoisseur of quality."

The success of the designs of Hilary Radley was an inspiration to Progress — as Waxman points out, "She's all alone."

Another reason for the diversification is the declining coat industry in Canada as many of the older companies fade away, without new blood to keep them current.

"There are very few people left," Waxman said. "You really have to have coats in your blood to survive. We have the manufacturing expertise and we are excited about working with a top-notch designer."

The line is based on three fabrications: a fine wool gabardine, a suede-like brushed cotton (peachskin) and an iridescent polyester.

There are many design and styling details including capelets, drawstring back, A-lines with back pleats, buttoned vents and many other trenchcoat details.

The linings are fancy in paisley or plaid, and the palette includes red, green, khaki, white, beige, tan and navy.

Marielle Fleury Designs will retail in the $350-450 range. Progress Cloak also manufactures a moderate-to-medium priced line under the Giorgio label, and a medium-to-better priced line under the Progress label.

Multi-media presentation

Trade event focuses on woollen garments for spring

By
MARIE MOORE

The Wool Bureau of Canada and Toronto Life Fashion magazine provided a well-orchestrated, multi-media presentation outlining at Toronto's recent Collections 89.

The show was touted to feature "a complete, detailed overview of the season's signature trends including the influences and inspirations that have shaped those trends with the colors, prints, patterns, silhouettes and fashion details that will represent spring 89 imperatives."

The audio/visual program was accompanied by garments selected from Raffinati, Irving Samuel, Sami, Hilary Radley, Shiff, Louben, Marie-France, Bagatelle, Looks, Jac Dale, Debbie Shuchat, Jean-Claude Poitras, Alain Thomas, Jocardi, Bernard Cowan, Original Sterling, Mr. Jax, Bianca, Sterling Stall, Selina, Alfred Sung and many others.

In her introduction to the standing-room-only crowd, fashion commentator Marina Sturdza stressed that the buyers present were "the selectors" of what women would wear and that their responsibilities to the consumer, based on their interpretation of consumers' wants and needs, were great.

Sturdza also discussed the fashion industry describing it as "the only one that re-invests and revitalizes itself every season — giving it so much energy and making it so volatile."

Priming her audience with convincing enthusiasm, leaving no doubt in anyone's mind that what was to follow would be of significant importance to consumers everywhere, Sturdza vacated her platform, making room for Part 2 of the presentation.

At this point, a brief film was shown. The audience suddenly found itself sharing the thoughts and words of distinguished Wool Wear designers Sonia Rykiel, Donna Karen, Claude Montana, Tai Missoni and Oscar de la Renta as they walked with shepherds through the grassy knolls of Australia's sheep country or inspected the harvest of a successful shearing season.

It was picturesque, novel and interesting. The scene was set as Gianni Versace said in thickly accented English, "Wool for me is as clay to the sculptor." What poetry. Enter Part 3.

From the depths of our cinematography-induced euphoria the audience was suddenly brought back to Trinity Maxi Theatre by slides which detailed A Touch of Class ... The Windsor Style, lively music and a runway show which featured appropriately-styled woollens.

The audience was (as the slides pointed out) to expect "rich Riviera styling, subtle checks and plaids, deaville pyjamas and seasonless sophistication."

Unfortunately what followed were well-finished, nicely-designed but often anti-climatic designs. Viewed under normal circumstances — the caped-cape coats, full-length and width pants, bolero jackets and bordered skirts — would have been impressive but I couldn't help wondering if the build up hadn't outclassed the clothes.

The format continued with The Cool Marbles (featuring a beautifully textured ribbing edge and inserts on Poitras's entry) in stone and concrete shades, Desert Sands (multi-textured prints in primitive motifs with khaki, taupe, slate, navy, caramel and cream) of which Cowan's outfit seemed most notable, and Oriental Jewels (billed as Mideast-inspired with Ikat, tribal or gently defined silhouettes) not at all depicted by the bold chartreuse-and-fuchsia stripes mixed with matching dots on fabulous Radley suitings.

Other categories included: The Blues ... Seas and Sky (batik prints, mosaics, tie-dyes, madras, nauticals and Caribbean-influenced cruisewear), which featured the Gispa label in vivid purple, emerald, white and navy; The Romantics (pleasant florals, Edwardian grace, lingerie looks and floral stripings), with Marie-France windowpane pastels; Ultra Moderns (uniform inspirations, minimalism, embroidery and sculptural shaping) with more appropriately placed Radley designs that distinguished themselves with unique color blocking and form.

One last group, Confetti Brights, utilized pattern mixing with a salute to the 60s and 70s. Slides announced Lacroix and Madonna as leading influential forces in this category, which was hard to imagine when neither of them are noted for the kinds of clothes designed by Mr. Jax, Irving Samuels, Jocardi and Alain Thomas.

There was nothing wrong with the clothes. In fact, they are the Cool Wool suitings and separates that most Canadian and American women will buy and wear next spring. It's just too bad that a fascinating audio/visual presentation appeared to have more depth than lightweight woollens.

Collections garners praise from many participants

By
MARIE MOORE

Collections is an excellent trade vehicle for those companies that use it effectively, the show's co-producer says.

Steven Levy, whose partner is Toronto lawyer and businessman Martin Rumack, said, "When a company wants a more intimate, exclusive event for buyers and press — they have to reach out, identify their market and invite them to attend.

"Companies that followed this system saw 500 to 600 people at their show. Companies that didn't take full advantage of the opportunities, didn't," he said.

"For example, one store I know has increased their orders right across the board — a healthy improvement for some of our participants. Sea Queen was very happy with their sales — the bridal people were ecstatic — the Woolmark group was pleased."

Levy, who together with Rumack also produces The Festival of Canadian Fashion and The One-of-a-Kind Craft Show, says that it's a simple concept — good marketing pays off.

Designer Pat McDonagh showed three groupings: Playgrounds, a bright Picasso print in pink, green, red, white and black; Blue Bell, a cruisewear theme in tiny navy-and-cream dots; which is scheduled for spring delivery dates, and a 100% Irish linen collection that's available in navy, green, orange, white and army beige.

She said she was "agreeably surprised" with the good response her lines received. New accounts and plenty of repeat appointments were booked as a result of her runway presentation. McDonagh attracted both Canadian and American buyers to her showroom.

Peter Lam did well at the show, too. His selection of silk and linen suitings shone on the runway — and in the showroom. Quite a few new faces popped in to browse and buy — partly due to pre-production publicity initiated by Lam and Goodding, his manufacturer.

Lisa Clark said she has had "a really positive response" from the event.

"We have a new order already — and our clothes just left the runway 20 minutes ago."

Clark, who moved to Toronto from Winnipeg in July, says she's been keeping "too low a profile and really wanted to do this."

She has participated in The Festival of Canadian Fashion in the past and seemed pleased that she was able to organize herself in time to participate in Collections.

Buyers seemed happy with the selection at Toronto's Maxi Theatre. One of the comments overheard that made a lot of sense concerned the showrooms.

"It would be helpful if everyone was in a showroom for all three days," the buyer said. "Then, those of us who could only buy on one or two days would get a chance to see everything. Maybe organizers should consider this in the future."

Any other suggestions? Well, yes. Designers, press and buyers all said it might be advantageous to repeat more shows — especially the ones that repeated clothing labels — not promotional presentations.

Secondly, more specific times for receptions should be listed so that people who don't have time to enjoy hospitality sessions can arrive just before showtime.

Finally, improve parking facilities.

On the other hand, positive comments included favorable responses to having food available on site, receptions which were scheduled at mealtimes, shows which basically started on time, models who fit the clothes and more input into the selection of models by designers and/or manufacturers.

While there is still obviously room for improvement, the people for whom Collections is organized seemed to approve the production. Those who went the extra step and utilized the show's potential to its fullest, received the best reward — success.

Tzatz not all folks

Siblings create denim styles

By
BRUCE PARKINSON

Sibling design team Stephen and Susan Lokash have opened a store featuring their own line, which they call Tzatz. (Rough Layout photo)

Why?

Well, first of all they are not wife and husband, as most of their customers assume. They are brother and sister. When people discover this fact their most common response is, "Oh, God, If I had to work with my sister/brother..."

Secondly, as many people know, fashion design and merchandising is a specialized field requiring years of study at a college or university.

Nobody told these two about that.

Susan studied dance for a year, then toured Europe. Stephen studied political science and economics, then went to Australia. Not exactly a plethora of fashion background.

Stephen was back here for a visit, return ticket to Oz in hand, when his sister somehow convinced him to stay in Toronto and start a clothing business. They've hardly had a day off since.

That was about 18 months ago. Susan now is 23, Stephen 27, and their clothing line — Tzatz — has seen nothing but success.

After a year of retailing their creations in the Ontario Designers Showcase at the Queen's Quay Terminal, the Lokash team has leased a store on Yonge St. near Eglinton Ave. which will operate under the same name as the line.

The name comes from the Yiddish word Tzatzkalla loosely translated as "cute as a button" young girl. This was the term of endearment Stephen used for his sister when they were children.

It was Susan who started the ball rolling, experimenting with rhinestones appliqued onto denim pants and jackets. She made some pocket money by selling them to friends.

"Even when I was little I always dressed myself. I had an eye for different things," she said.

Once the two had decided to team up, it was "trial and error" time.

"We had no idea what we were doing but we faked it well," Stephen said.

When Susan started making leather floral applique designs on jean jackets and pants, Stephen told her he thought they were ugly. They have also been the biggest seller for Tzatz right from the start.

Stephen learned from that experience. When his sister is not looking, he leans over and whispers conspiratorially, "I think she has better taste than I do, but don't tell her that."

The Lokashes made a snowy trip to Montreal, carrying mismatched luggage with their designs inside. Despite not getting a warm welcome in some quarters, they managed to sell to four stores, made outrageous delivery promises and came home to a frenzy of work to try to meet them.

"Things have snowballed since then," Susan said.

After all the denim they had sold, the Lokashes still had yet to see someone on the streets wearing one of their creations. The exciting moment finally occurred on an inspirational trip to Europe.

Coming out of the Louvre, the pair were dumbfounded to see someone wearing a Tzatz jacket. The wearer turned out to be an American tourist who had bought the jacket on a trip to Toronto.

"It's a big step, but every step you take seems so big, then you look back at it and laugh," Stephen said.

They spent a good deal of time looking for a suitable location, and knew immediately when they had found the right one, a store that has sold women's fashions for more than 70 years, starting out as Joy Frocks and spending the last 43 years as the home of Charles Tarnow's designs.

The Tzatz location at Queen's Quay will remain in operation, serving the often-repeat clientele, but the new store will give them the freedom to show their designs the way they want to.

Stephen says the new store will be "a real head-turner. Susan enjoys turning heads with the striking clothes she wears and we want to reflect that same image in our store."

There's nothing pretentious about the Lokash brother and sister act. They are genuine, fun, warm people and that is probably one of the major reasons for their success. Despite the long hours and hard work they are obviously enjoying themselves.

And even though their own backgrounds weren't directed towards the fashion business, as Stephen says, "It's in our blood."

PBS to air program on Kristallnacht aftermath

WASHINGTON —
Nov. 9, 1938, was the cold autumn night that became known as Kristallnacht, the night of broken glass. Within hours after the Nazis cabled orders throughout Germany and Austria, hundreds of synagogues were destroyed, many Jews were murdered, thousands were arrested and countless Jewish-owned businesses were destroyed.

In conjunction with 50th anniversary of the event, Public Broadcasting Stations will air Kristallnacht: The Journey From 1938 To 1988. The 1-hour program will be shown at 9 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 9 on Vermont ETV (Channel 33) and at 10 p.m., Wednesday, Nov. 9 and at 3 p.m., Nov. 10 on WNED Buffalo (Channel 17).

Anchored by veteran broadcaster Eric Sevareid, the documentary examines the memories and contemporary struggles of Jews who live in Berlin and Veinna today, and records the soul-searching efforts of people in Germany and Austria to come to terms with their Nazi past.

The program includes what is believed to be the only recording of the chilling events of Kristallnacht, an audio tape of sounds and voices from the streets of Vienna, and the only film of a synagogue burning.

The two days of terror are also recalled through the eyes and memories of the living:

• "I heard it out of the window and you saw the heaven was red and you knew something burns."

• "They went into the rooms and destroyed everything they could find. . . all the books, all the crystal, all the glasses. Whatever could be destroyed was destroyed."

• "Then we knew that there was no turning back. This was for good, we knew. The end of our normal life."

"Troubled past"

The 50th anniversary of Kristallnacht will be observed internationally, said producer Robert Frye. "But the real context of this observance is today . . . what is happening in these communities (in Germany and Austria), what is the sense of the moment and how are people living with a troubled past? . . . Some of the wounds have healed. Some are still felt."

Frye, a television journalist for more than 25 years, was executive producer of ABC's World News Tonight.

Program anchor Eric Sevareid, a newsman for nearly five decades, was in Paris at the time of Kristallnacht and traveled through Germany shortly afterwards to observe its aftermath.

Kristallnacht: The Journey From 1938 to 1988 is produced by WETA Washington, DC, in association with Bolthead Communications and funded by the Ronald S. Lauder Foundation. The Foundation is a philanthropic organization that encourages efforts to promote understanding of minority problems and to ensure the survival of Jewish European culture.

Bird a feather in Eastwood's cap

By
SHELDON KIRSHNER

Forest Whitaker as Charlie Bird Parker

TORONTO —
Clint Eastwood's debut as a director is a notable event.

Bird, which is about the life of legendary jazz musician Charlie "Yardbird" Parker, is longish but stylistic, brooding but vital.

A few words about Parker. As a saxophone player, he had no peers. He produced new sounds that amazed and delighted listeners in clubs across the U.S. and Western Europe. Together with Duke Ellington and Dizzy Gillespie, he was an original.

But Parker's taste for drugs, alcohol and loose women proved to be his downfall. When he died of a heart attack in 1955, he was only 34 but resembled a 65-year-old man. At least this was what the medical examiner thought.

Bird, now playing at Famous Players theatres, interprets his tumultuous life with verve and with loving care. This is by no stretch of the imagination a distant, objective analysis of Parker.

Bird, besides revealing the dissolution of an immensely talented musician, reveals the face of a racist society.

It is an unusually serious film, with an exceptional musical score, but the humor is not missing. In one unforgettable scene, Parker, wearing a white yarmulke, performs at an Orthodox Jewish wedding in Brooklyn, attuning his playing to Klezmer music. "They're not Jewish boys, but they're good," Parker's Jewish friend, Red Rodney (Michael Zelniker), is informed by the host, a chassid with a beard.

Accused focuses on trauma of rape

TORONTO —
Jonathan Kaplan's film, The Accused, delves into a topic that destroys a woman's self-esteem — rape.

Foster is Sarah Tobias, a coarse, foul-mouthed, boozing, pot-smoking waitress who is gang-raped in the sleazy bar in which she works. McGillis is the smooth, somewhat remote assistant district attorney who prosecutes the criminals.

Now playing at Famous Players theatres, The Accused is not only a portrait of the traumas of a rape victim, but a mild indictment of an uncaring legal system that in effect winks at this unspeakable crime.

Kathryn Murphy (McGillis) and Sarah Tobias (Foster) are personally incompatible. Murphy, self-assured and sophisticated, looks down on her ill-educated, floozy client. Without even consulting Tobias, whom she feels will make a poor impression in court, Murphy arranges a plea bargaining deal with the rapists' lawyers.

It's a neat and nifty maneuver, but it angers Tobias and further complicates her life. To make amends, Murphy goes after the spectators in the bar who egged on the rapists.

Foster delivers a very fine accounting of herself. It's as if she spent her entire career waiting for this role. McGillis is cool and composed.

The Accused, far from sensationalizing rape, approaches it with tact and sensitivity for a woman's feelings. It's not a pretty story but it's one that cries out for attention in a violence-prone society. S.K.

Miransky evening shows "present" of Yiddish

By GLORIA DEUTSCH

TORONTO —

Is there a future for Yiddish literature? The four hundred or so people who turned out to pay homage to local poet Peretz Miransky at an evening given in his honor by the Jewish community clearly think so.

The speeches, tributes, readings and songs, all in Yiddish, produced the emotional response associated with the language. But there were few members of the audience under the age of 60.

Miransky himself, when asked about the future of Yiddish, replied, "I'm not a novi (prophet); I'm a poet."

But if the future is in doubt, the present certainly isn't. Miransky, a sprightly 80-year-old, was this year awarded the prestigious Yitshak Manger prize for Yiddish literature, travelling to Israel last summer to receive the award.

The Toronto community tribute, held at Beth Tikvah Synagogue, was sponsored jointly by the Committee for Yiddish of the Toronto Jewish Congress, the Friends of Yiddish, the Yiddish Culture Council and the Albert Latner Jewish Public Library. It celebrated the twin landmarks of Miransky's 80th birthday and the winning of what has been described as the Yiddish equivalent of the Nobel prize for literature.

Guest speaker at the evening was Leibl Tencer, professor of Yiddish at McGill University in Montreal whose scholarly analysis of Miransky's work stressed the universality of his appeal.

"Like all poets, he sings about something but laments it too. His fables in particular point up the foibles of his fellow men without sermonizing, using humor and allegory to express the human condition."

A moving tribute to Miransky came from his three children, born in Canada after he came here in 1949 from Vilna, having lost his first wife and a child in the Holocaust.

Several of Miransky's poems, set to music by composer Srul Glick, were performed by Cantor Louis Danto and the Beth Tikvah choir, accompanied by Lina Zemelman on the piano. Glick, who works closely with Miransky, described this collaboration as "one of the highlights of my life, to work with this great man."

The process usually involves choosing the poems, discussing them, then composing the music. In two of the songs performed on this occasion, Zingt Mit Mir a Yiddish Lid and Lulinke, the melodies came first and Miransky "set them to Yiddish."

Readings of Miransky's poems and fables were given by Nat Garnick, Jeannette Stein and Gloria Valentine who delighted the audience with their polished interpretations.

A highlight of the musical program was the tone poem Es davent der Zumer, a sensuous evocation of nature as a form of religious expression, with music by Srul Glick. It suited to perfection the lovely tenor voice of Cantor Louis Danto who was accompanied by Patricia Wait on the clarinet and Casey Sokol on the piano.

A certificate in recognition of his contribution to Yiddish literature was presented to Miransky. In accepting, the poet thanked all those involved in the evening and paid tribute to many including his wife Saba who accompanied him and to whom he first reads all his works.

He said he felt a responsibility, being one of only two surviving members of the famous "Yung Vilne," the Vilna group of young Yiddish authors which flourished after World War I, to continue its traditions. (The other survivor, Avraham Sutzkever, recieved the Yitshak Manager award last year.)

Asked later if the members of the Vilna group were influenced by Zionism, Miransky said, "Not at all. We were all from poor homes. The Zionists were the rich ones. But today is different. I have written half a book of poems about Israel."

The chairman for the evening was Aron Fainer, and greetings from the planning committee were given by Sam Lipschitz.

Feinstein tickles the ivories and croons in a romantic style

GERRY MORRIS, The CJN's New York Theatre critic, reports on another Broadway hit. Morris is a member of Outer Critics Circle, Drama Desk and American Theatre Critics Association.

NEW YORK —

Five years ago 32-year-old Michael Feinstein was singing and playing piano in the lounge of a modest hotel in Los Angeles. Since then he has managed to play the White House, be a perennial sellout at the Oak Room of the Algonquin Hotel in New York, record five albums, complete a 20-city tour of Europe with Liza Minnelli and pack 17,000 seats at Hollywood Bowl for two consecutive nights.

And now he has catapulted to where he and his heart belong — Broadway.

Feinstein's singing has never been better and his appeal never more widespread. He presides at the keyboard like a Blithe Spirit of the 30s and 40s, deftly interpreting Broadway show tunes with his smooth crooning voice, and wearing a smile that seems to say, "This is what life is all about."

His virtually encyclopedic knowledge of vintage songs was extensive enough to earn him the friendship of lyricist Ira Gershwin. Then just a 20-year-old kid, Feinstein was hired by Ira to organize and catalogue reams of Gershwin lyrics and music — a 3-week project that lasted six years. Feinstein is today a devout, articulate keeper of the Gershwin flame, with an interpretive style that seems to have a direct line to the composer's heart.

Four years ago he emerged as the rage of Hollywood when a host of celebrities led by his strongest supporter Liza Minnelli caught his act. Minnelli, who aside from his mother Mazie is perhaps his biggest fan, says: "We're joined at the hip. Michael has real affection for the material. He's romantic in a way so few people are nowadays."

Feinstein, a native of Columbus, Ohio, grew up listening to Al Jolson and Bing Crosby on old 78 records, and was captivated and influenced by the power and energy of their voices.

His baritone voice is pleasant, a little nasal when he reaches for high notes, but what are consistently on display are Feinstein's cultivated and delightful musical sensibility and zest. His oft-stated purpose is simply to reacquaint the masses with the music of Arlen, Kern, Porter, Berlin, Gershwin and Harry Warren.

And that's what he's doing eight times a week at the Booth Theatre. The revue is bulging with the songs of his idols, creating the therapeutic effect of joy and enthusiasm throughout the theatre.

Feinstein supplies his act with a wealth of humorous show business lore that he skilfully incorporates as running patter. Apart from a few standup forays to centre stage, Feinstein remains confined at his perch behind the piano. He plays some 2-piano duets with his conductor Elliot Fintel, who is backed by a lively and versatile sextet.

Only a limited few (Lena Horne, Victor Borge, Shirley MacLaine, Jackie Mason and a handful of others) have been able to parlay what is essentially a first-rate club act into a successful Broadway turn. Add to that list the name of Michael Feinstein.

Plays reflect maturing of dramatists

By
FRANK RASKY

TORONTO —

It's a pleasure to report that two new Canadian plays, which opened here recently, reflect the coming of age of our homegrown playwrights.

Both have certain weaknesses. And they're structurally poles apart. But both are as Canadian as hockey. And they're bound to become part of the repertoire of our theatres across the country.

One is an intimate, 2-character, 85-minute romantic comedy, Dave Carley's Midnight Madness. It's running until Nov. 13 at the Tarragon Theatre Extra Space (30 Bridgman Ave., 531-1827).

The other is a large-scale, 14-character, 3-hour family epic by David French titled 1949. It's playing until Nov. 12 at the St. Lawrence Centre Bluma Appel Theatre (366-7723).

Let's consider the more modest of the pair first.

Midnight Madness is a professional breakthrough for Dave Carley. He is a 33-year-old playwright, who was born in Peterborough, Ont., and is a former reporter for the weekly Kawartha Sun.

Bill Glassco, that distinguished discoverer of fresh Canadian talent, directed the play last August when it premiered at the Muskoka Festival in Gravenhurst. His assistant, Michael Shamata, has now ably restaged it in its more polished form.

It's a gentle, boy-meets-girl comedy about two high school dropouts who, 14 years later, as Hollywood scriptwriters phrase it, remeet "cute." Their encounter occurs in the bed department at a midnight going-out-of-business sale at Bloom's, a department store on the main street of a small city resembling Peterborough.

Wesley is a shy, wry, amiable wimp of a bachelor. He has, in effect, buried himself in a dead-end job for the past decade; he is sales clerk for a downtown store which is failing due to the invasion of malls in the suburbs.

Anna is the single parent of a teenaged boy, equally droll, likable and lonely. She has returned to set up a legal practice in her hometown after working her way through law school in Toronto.

As they exchange confidences, we learn that Anna fled from school after becoming pregnant by a hippie poet. She couldn't face her grade 13 schoolmates, who derisively mocked her as "Pincushion," the school slut, and decorated her locker with condoms.

Wesley also escaped from cruel taunters at school. They jeered him off the stage at the assembly hall when he attempted to win their approval by reciting Shakespeare's declamatory poetry from Julius Caesar. They nicknamed him "Weirdly."

Anna confides somewhat facetiously, "Deep down, I'm a shallow person." It could be said that the humor in this play is likewise glib, the characterization skin deep, and the dramatic conflict negligible.

Yet, as articulated by two of Canada's fine young actors, John Dolan and Michelle Fisk, the dialogue is funny, the story contemporary, and altogether it's a commercially viable comedy that sparkles with charm.

Playwright David French, born 49 years ago in the bleak Newfoundland outport of Coley's Point, moved with his family to Toronto's "Newfy" ghetto in the Oakwood-Rogers Rd. area at the age of 6.

He has since made an international name for himself by chronicling the saga of the displaced Mercer family in a deeply-felt, semi-autobiographical trilogy, Leaving Home, Of The Fields, Lately and Salt-Water Moon. He has done so under the sensitive guidance of the same Bill Glassco, co-artistic director of the Canadian Stage Company.

Despite several flaws, 1949, the newest edition in the ongoing Mercer series, is French's most ambitious, most richly comic, and profoundly moving play.

Its title refers to the landmark year when Newfoundlanders voted to unite with Canada and their stubborn little British colony was finally "dragged kicking and screaming into the 20th century" by Premier Joey Smallwood to become our 10th province.

French is not content with merely dramatizing how that historic switch of loyalties has affected the Mercers. In addition, he has attempted to expand that theme. He has stretched it to embrace the possibility of Canadians waking up one morning to find they have been swallowed up by the U.S. They have thus lost their cultural identity thanks to the controversial free-trade deal.

Interestingly, when that dread notion was raised and repudiated onstage on opening night, a good many members of the audience spontaneously burst into applause.

It was one of the high points of a densely textured drama, which suffered from an embarrassment of riches. It was literally overcluttered with an excess of themes and sub-plots and people.

The setting, marvellously recreated by designer Peter Hartwell, is the scruffy, working-class home of the Mercers in Toronto, with a British Union Jack defiantly flying from the verandah.

The main characters, all brilliantly portrayed by a first-rate cast, include Jacob Mercer (Michael Hogan), a volatile, hot-tempered carpenter, who is ambivalent about Newfoundland's absorption into Confederation; his doughty mother, Rachel (Patricia Hamilton), who wears a black armband as a sign of mourning for her homeland; his attractive wife, Mary (Dixie Seatle) who has grim memories of their two children being unable to taste fresh fruit until the family moved to Toronto; and Mary's sister, Dot (Brenda Robins), anguished because she can't have a child from her estranged, seemingly infertile husband.

But, except for two preachy monologues which should have been cut along with several extraneous characters, the play is by no means all gloom and doom. French's gift for comic storytelling, pungent with salty Irish-Newfy dialect, left me laughing until the tears came.

Without revealing the punchlines, I can state that I howled with particular glee at episodes involving a boy's yanked-out tonsils put to extraordinary use, a wig stolen from a grumpy schoolteacher, and the terrible dilemmas that arise, my son, when a lying Newfoundlander pretends to come from Dublin.

It's a triumphant feat for French, and I can hardly wait to see his Mercer saga turned into a TV series.

Drop inhibitions with Decadence

By BEN ROSE

TORONTO —

Don't take your grandmother (or your mother) to see Decadence playing at Factory Theatre Studio Cafe until Nov. 6.

This British play by Steven Berkoff is an attack on Maggie Thatcher's England and its class system and, on the way, it dispenses the randiest dialogue heard in Toronto for a long while.

The plot is disarmingly simple. Steve is having an affair with Helen while his wife, Sybil, is coupling with Les, a private detective she has hired to follow Steve. Simon Bradbury and Caro Coltman, two highly experienced Canadian actors, play both couples, aided by blackouts. The roles require them to be acrobatic as well. Their good British accents give Decadence credibility.

As befits a good comedy, some of the heartiest laughs come not from words but from physical action in remarkable situations, not all of them blue. They flow from the plot—Steve and Helen fret and chatter about the perils of being privileged and rich while the working class couple of Les and Sybil plot revenge.

Hannah Sandberg exhibition

Art reflects her love of Bible

By
CYNTHIA GASNER

TORONTO —

Biblical painter and educator Hannah Sandberg lives with the patriarchs and matriarchs of the Bible. She interprets their stories into vibrant expressionist paintings that reflect both her lifelong infatuation with the spiritual and historical relevance of the ancient writings and her wealth of biblical knowledge.

Sitting in the upper gallery of the Goethe Institute where Sandberg's paintings, done over the past 25 years, are on exhibition until Nov. 5, the artist's tranquil crystal blue eyes ignite with passion as she describes to visitors the deep and profound symbolisms in her works.

The Israeli-born artist has spent six decades exploring the mysteries of each verse, phrase and letter of many of the books of the Bible. "The Bible is an ocean of knowledge and beauty and every day I find something new and extraordinary in the passages — even those that I read years ago."

She explains, "I paint commentary on the Bible using color and form." She has completed seven books of the Bible, interpreting every sentence in illuminated reds, blues, greens and yellows. Her prolific brush has depicted the book of Ruth, Ecclesiastes, Zachariah, Jonah, Psalms, Isaiah, Lamentations and other books, as well as the Ten Commandments and numerous prayers.

There is a stark contrast between her modest and humble personality and her powerful and somewhat whimsical interpretative paintings.

Born in Safad, the city of mysticism and the founders of Kabbalah, the Rosner family moved to Jerusalem. "We had a small store and while my mother went to prepare the meals, I would sit and study the Tanach (Bible). Something inside me was awakened — the Hebrew letters would speak to me — they became human to me."

She says that without the Bible, the world couldn't exist. "It teaches mankind ethics, health, law, behavior, philosophy and a lot of wisdom of life."

She embraces the allegorical themes skilfully and infuses them with her love for the spirit of Israel. Driven by an inner force, she creates landscapes that burst forth with dancing Hebrew letters from her acrylic canvases that people can study and enjoy.

Hannah was married to Mordechai Sandberg, a physician who gave up his medical practice to pursue a career in music and the Bible. The Sandbergs moved to England to lecture and then to New York where her husband dedicated his life to reacreating the music of the Bible and Hannah continued her biblical studies, painting and teaching.

When the war broke out, the Sandbergs were unable to return to Palestine. They remained in New York where Hannah had many exhibitions. In 1970, they were invited to Toronto to teach at York University. Mordechai taught music and the Bible and Hannah taught visual art and the Bible.

She became the artist-in-residence at York and was honored by the Women's Centre at York University. Presently, she is a guest lecturer at the university and presents programs on art for study groups.

In the future, she would like to publish a book of her paintings and says that she hopes some patron of the arts will come forward to help turn her dream into reality. "This way," she adds, "everyone would have an opportunity to have this treasure in their homes, for themselves and their children."

It is well worth a visit to see the joy and optimism reflected in Sandberg's visual biblical themes and folklore, an expression of her deep religious faith. And there is something in the collection for those beginning to collect art as well as the seasoned collector.

The Goethe Institute is located at 1067 Yonge St. The gallery is open from 10 to 5 weekdays, and until 8 p.m. on Wednesdays and Thursdays.

BERNARD BASKIN

Begin, An Anatomy of Leadership. By Sasoon Sofer. Oxford $37.50.

There are many unanswered questions about the life, accomplishments and influence of Menachem Begin. Was he an effective and competent leader and Prime Minister? Was he a visionary or activist? Did he choose talented advisors and aides? Did he remain faithful to his Herut principles? Was his dream of an undivided Greater Israel a mirage? Did his historical romanticism ever bow before reality? Can the Lebanon War be justified?

Why did he precipitously withdraw from public life? Why didn't he leave proper political heirs?

The author, a lecturer in International Relations at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, discusses these and other questions in a book that is not a conventional biography, but largely an analysis of Begin's perception of reality, his strategic perspective and his historical point of view.

Sofer's evaluation of Israel's sixth Prime Minister is essentially negative. His election victory in 1977 was both challenge and opportunity. Unhappily, Begin did not rise to the occasion. At the time of his retirement in 1983 he left a society in a "state of economic bankruptcy, moral decline, without political stability, riven and divided."

A year before he came to power he wrote that a statesman's mettle can't be known immediately. "A ship's captain is known in a storm, a maestro in playing and a statesman in his ability to see what lies ahead." If that is the case, says the author, then Begin failed. With his own hands he paved the way to the end of his rule.

Begin was a poor decision maker. He was incapable of systematic operational planning. In the military realm it is unlikely that he understood the system at his command, its operations, strengths and limitations. "As the (Lebanese) war continued it became apparent that he was not in control."

Sofer asserts that the choice of Begin's associates was often on the basis of his personal inclinations and affection rather than because of talent and competence.

Begin believed strongly in the loyalty and support of the world Jewish community, but always doubted its power. In 1975 he proposed the establishment of a council that would meet monthly in Jerusalem, composed of representatives from the State of Israel and the Jewish people. This idea, of course, never achieved fruition. But how ironical, suggests the author, that Begin's leadership was marked by a widening rift between Israel and a large portion of Jewry.

Always a believer in the "great man" theory of history, his prime heroes were Herzl, Jabotinsky and Garibaldi, the Italian patriot who cried "Rome or death," "We shall prevail or die."

This lucid and stimulating book traces Begin's life from his obscure beginnings in Eastern Europe through his extraordinary 40 years of political activism in Palestine and Israel — including the peace treaty with Egypt, the bombing of Iraq's nuclear reactor and the war in Lebanon.

In seclusion, Begin remains a figure who continues to haunt both detractors and staunch supporters. This book goes a long way to explain the thinking of a complex and many-sided personality who became a "victim of history."

Author not a Holocaust victim, but a "victor"

By
FRANK RASKY

I hate to admit it, but I must confess I dread reading most books by Holocaust victims. The inevitable recital of pain they endured I find repetitive and numbing and ultimately boring.

Not so the stories by Roma Gelblum-Bross, born in Lodz, Poland, a former refugee on the run from the advancing Nazis, a wayfarer who wandered with her family to Russia and then Israel, and is now settled in Montreal.

At 51, she has collected seven of her exquisitely written, partially fictionalized short stories based on her experiences. They're contained in her first book, which was launched last week at the Jewish Public Library in Montreal.

It bears the lovely haunting title, To Samarkand And Back. It is published by Cormorant Books (RR1, Dunvegan, Ont., K0C 1J0) and sells for $10.95 at most quality bookstores.

There are two qualities that make her book such an amazing accomplishment, which has impelled the distinguished Montreal novelist Hugh Maclennan to call it a "masterpiece."

One is her sensuous, gem-like, poetic prose; it dazzles you with its brilliance and is an extraordinary feat for an immigrant whose English is her fourth adopted language after Polish, Russian and Hebrew. The other is the unswervingly optimistic spirit that suffuses her storytelling and renders it a joy rather than a burden to read.

It was also a joy to interview her in The CJN newsroom the other day while she was on a book promotional tour sponsored by the Canada Council. She is a perky wisp of a woman, just 5-foot-2, with curly brown hair, cornflower-blue eyes, and an ebullient manner.

"I don't consider myself a Holocaust victim," she told me in her impeccable, though heavily accented, English. "I consider myself a Holocaust victor. I've triumphed over my trials and tribulations."

She said that some people have asked her whether she has had nightmares about her harrowing childhood. Without meaning to sound like a Pollyanna, she likes to answer cheerfully, "Happy childhoods don't lend themselves to literature. I feel lucky. I see my problems of the past as a life enrichment.

"What counts is that I've survived to tell the tale and have been uplifted by the problems. Or, as the saying goes, if life hands you a lemon, make lemonade out of it."

I asked her, "How come you're such a fluent writer?"

She says she has been writing since the age of 7, inspired by the poetry of Alexander Pushkin and the artistic sensibilities of her parents. Her father, the late Leon Gelblum (which means "golden flower" in Polish), was a painter who studied at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris and was adept at painting designs on tile and silkscreen.

Maurice Solway

Her mother, Zofia, still going at 87 in Montreal, is a former journalist and translator, who eventually helped Roma build the family's 15-employee R & H Ceramics business in Montreal.

Roma herself has a keen ear for languages. Shortly after her family moved to Israel in 1950, she was so adept at Hebrew that she was the first woman to become a war correspondent for the Israeli army weekly Bemachaneh and later wrote for the daily Maariv.

In 1962, she got her BA in English and sociology at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, married a Canadian physics and maths student, and divorced him after they moved to Montreal. It was only eight years ago that she began writing short stories in English at Concordia University, encouraged by her teacher, the noted poet Elizabeth Spencer.

She is now working on a second collection of stories, tentatively titled Winters, dealing with her experiences in Canada.

Why the reference to Samarkand in the title of her present book?

Not only is it symbolic of an exotic place of enchantment — the capital city of Tamberlain, the medieval conqueror, and the home of Sheherezade's royal husband who listened to her Tales of the Thousand And One Nights. It was also the actual Russian city where Roma spent five years of her childhood while World War II raged in Europe.

"I truly remember it as a faraway place of enchantment," she now says. She describes it this way in her book.

"My thoughts went back to Samarkand, where the sky was blue and brilliant, and where the landscape of minarets and ancient palaces appeared like a mirage against the desert and mountains, where blue-bellied swallows dived from the mauve evening sky, and where mulberry trees shaded the streets and the noisy vendors of fruits and flowers."

Her use of the five senses in detailed images is most vivid in her description of the rusty train when her family was fleeing from the German front with other Jewish refugees to the Russian steppes:

"When I woke up early in the morning, the train was moving slowly and heavily. It was emitting gasping, forced sounds, which were interrupted from time to time by the long wailing cry of the whistle. The bolts underneath the carriage squeaked shrilly with every turn and the wagon shook and rattled.

"Chilly misty air shrouded the windows. Shadows of telegraph poles were moving hastily on the panes, and frost clung in uneven patches to the greenish-gray metal of the window frame. The leg of someone seated on the roof of the wagon dangled in front of our window.

"When my eyes got used to the semi-darkness I saw human shapes that crouched, sat or lay on benches, on the floor, and on the luggage racks. They all looked as if they had just given up a night-long struggle with sleeplessness and had frozen into twisted positions, their hands clutching their belongings.

"Children were crying in their sleep. Enamelled nightpots attached to the bundles gave off a smell of urine that mingled with the smoke of handmade cigarettes, the sweat of dozens of unwashed bodies and the odor of rotting food.

"My parents' heads were moving silently back and forth, like the heads of marionettes forgotten by their puppeteer. It was stuffy, cold and deadly quiet."

And as a touch of black humor, she adds this delicious vignette of a fat, sweaty woman who perfumed herself with a cologne bottle that had a picture of lilies of the valley on its green label:

"From time to time she took the bottle out of her bag and carefully poured some drops into the crevice between her breasts. Warm wafts of sweetish air reached us as she fanned herself with a newspaper and my father would turn his head in discomfort.

"'You smell like a flower in an outhouse, Mrs. Milstein,' a burly man on the upper deck said to her once, and everybody laughed, but Mrs. Milstein blushed and was sad."

That is what I call a masterful word-painter in action.

A tip of my hat this week goes to Toronto sculptor Maryon Kantaroff, who I rank in artistic stature as Canada's female Henry Moore. Thirty-five of her voluptuous, sensual bronzes, ranging in price from $1,500 to $25,000, will be displayed at a major 2-week retrospective of her work beginning at 7 p.m., Nov. 3 at Kinsman Robinson Galleries, 25 Prince Arthur Ave., 964-2374.

Also exhibited will be her limited edition sculpture jewelry. These exquisite pieces, from the Kantaroff Art To Wear Collection, are cast in solid sterling silver or gold-plated sterling silver, and at $200 to $300, will make excellent Chanukah gifts.

Clarinetist Giora Feidman, billed as the "King of Klezmer Soul Music," will make his instrument coo, growl, quack and whistle, and imitate everything from a bagpiper to a snake charmer, at 8 p.m., Nov. 26 at Temple Emanu-El, 120 Old Colony Rd., 449-3880. Tickets are $18.

Anna Sandor, scriptwriter of Charlie Grant's War, writes me that things are going hotsy-totsy since she and her film producer husband, Bill Gough, moved from Toronto to Vancouver. Besides having two series on the air daily in re-runs, King of Kensington and Hangin' In, she's author of the coming-of-age TV film, Mama's Going To Buy You A Mocking Bird, to be shown Dec. 4 on CBC. And before then, on Nov. 20, the CBC will air her Two Men, a drama about a Hungarian immigrant who locates in Toronto the man he claims exterminated his family in World War II.

Darrin Baker, the 23-year Toronto master of voicing cartoon characters, writes me the great news that he has been hired to play the role of Babet in the forthcoming Canadian premiere of Les Miserables at the Royal Alexandra Theatre.

And my warm congratulations go to 81-year-old violinist Maurice Solway, who will give a Maurice Solway Scholarship Concert at 8 p.m., Nov. 24 at the Royal Conservatory's Concert Hall, 978-3771. The program will include Solway's compositions, Judicial Polka, in memory of Canada's Chief Justice Bora Laskin, and Valse Viennoise, in memory of Fritz Kreisler.

From flowers to cowboys

Many festivals planned in Florida

By
JAMES MONTAGNES

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. —
The 4th annual Chrysanthemum Festival will be held at Cypress Gardens, Nov. 12 to 30, when some 16,500 two-gallon pots, 30 5-foot high columns, 40 hanging baskets, 620 cascade pots and 24 ornamental plantings will be on display. Over two million blooms will cover the 6-acre site.

The popular fall flower will drape the ledges of a 40-foot high waterfall, nestle in stream beds and cascade over the walls of an Italian-style fountain. Nine varieties of mums are being grown for this year's festival, including seven varieties of daisy mums, one decorative variety and one anemone selection.

At Lake Wales, south of Orlando, there are daily carillon recitals at the Bok Tower, also known as America's Singing Tower. On clear nights there are also Moonlight Recitals on the 57 bronze bells, which range in size from 17 pounds to nearly 12 tons. The Bok Tower, located in a garden setting, was a gift in 1929 to the American people by Dutch immigrant Edward Bok, a Philadelphia author and publisher.

In mid-December the Orange Bowl Festival starts for a month at Miami, with a number of parades including one through the Little Havana area late in the month, the Orange Jamoree Parade on New Year's Eve and later that evening the Orange Bowl football classic. There are many events during the month in the Greater Miami area festival.

The Cracker Festival, paying tribute to Florida cowboys, is the first week of February at North Fort Myers on the Gulf coast. It is part of the re-enactment of the Indian wars Battle of Fort Myers, and will also include country music and a beauty pageant.

At Punta Gorda near Port Charlotte on the Florida west coast the Ponce de Leon Festival will be held Feb. 9 to 12 to mark the landing here in 1513 and 1521 of the Spanish explorer.

The first weekend in December at St. Petersburg the Florida Tournament of Bands will have high school marching bands from all over the state competing with parades, concerts and field show events. The last weekend in November there will be an International Clogging Championship, an American folk dance from the Appalachian Mountains.

At St. Augustine, claimed to be the oldest city in the United States, there is an annual Garden Club Tour of Homes on Dec. 1 and a Regatta of Lights with a parade of boats along the waterfront in mid-December.

In the Miami area there is Greyhound Racing at Hollywood from January to late April, and Horse Racing at Gulfstream Track at Hallandale from January to March.

At Tampa you can participate in the fun of a pirate invasion when the Gasparilla Invasion takes place on Feb. 13. The legendary pirate Jose Gasper and some 500 pirates come ashore in sailing ships and take over the city with parades and festivities. The festival has been held since 1904.

Artists' Days will be in Miami at Vizcaya, the Italian-style former home of industrialist James Deering the last weekend of February. It is the oldest art show of its type in Florida.

Lots to see and enjoy in New York's cultural scene

By ROSE KLEINER

NEW YORK, N.Y. —
Every season brings a new excitement to New York's cultural life, including the Jewish scene.

Israel's Haifa Municipal Theatre performs at Symphony Space (Broadway and 59th St.) to Nov. 6, with the play, The Soul Of A Jew. Well received at the Edinburgh Festival, and winner of drama prizes in Israel, the play is on tour as part of Israel's 40th anniversary celebrations. For tickets call (212) 629-0500.

A Shayna Maidel is playing at the Westside Arts Theater (541-8394), and Driving Miss Daisy, at the John Houseman Theatre (564-8038). The latter is about an elderly Jewish widow in the southern U.S., and is winner of the 1988 Pulitzer Prize.

Jackie Mason is back on Broadway again. His show, at the Brooks Atkinson Theater (719-4099), has won the 1988 Emmy Award.

One of the most exciting exhibits in the city this fall is A Sign And A Witness: 2,000 Years of Hebrew Books and Illuminated Manuscripts, which has just opened at the New York Public Library, on 42nd St. at Fifth Ave. On view are 185 books from 30 libraries, museums and private collections. They represent a broad range of some of the finest examples of Hebrew materials ever brought together in one exhibit.

This fall the 92nd St. Y has set out to show that there is Jewish life after the High Holidays too. Besides many lectures by figures such as Elie Wiesel, Julius Lester and Reuven Kimelman, there will be an evening with the Farbrengen Fiddlers (Dec. 4) when Klezmer, Hebrew, Yiddish and Ladino music will be heard along with bluegrass and jazz.

A Shabbaton called, Revitalizing Jewish Worship, will be held with Rabbi Lawrence Kushner, Dec. 2 and 3, and will include meals, worship and discussion sessions.

Emil Fackenheim, formerly of Toronto, will speak on Nov. 20.

A series of lectures for singles only, at the Y, will address a variety of contemporary life problems. The lectures are Sundays at 7.30 p.m., and continue throughout the fall.

For accommodation, New York offers package deals in the fall too. The Essex House (484-5100), overlooking Central Park, has three weekend packages available through Dec. 30. All provide deluxe or luxury accommodations and breakfast, as well as other amenities.

The New York Hilton, which has a Weekender rate special, now offers kosher meals through room service, as well as kosher style gift baskets for the room, which contain kosher wine, candies and various delicacies. The hotel now has non-smoking floors, and is in the process of opening a health club.

The Grand Hyatt, which offers free parking with its special package, will be hosting the Annual Gesher Foundation dinner on Nov. 6. The Hilton will host the International Holocaust Survivors' Dinner, Dec. 4, which will honor lawyer and author Samuel Pisar, one of the youngest survivors of Auschwitz.

Chanukah comes at the end of the fall season this year and it will be celebrated in many parts of the city. There is a menorah exhibit at the Jewish Museum (860-1888) through December. At the Grand Army Plaza, on Fifth Ave. and 59th St. (360-8141) a 32-foot menorah will be lit daily at sundown.

The 92nd St. Y has planned a kosher cooking program (Nov. 30) called Chanukah Delights: The Latke and Beyond. On Dec. 6 it will offer a program called Chanukah in New York: A Tour of Silver Judaica.

A concert of Ladino Sephardi music, called the Golden Age of Spain, will be heard at the Hebrew Arts School's Merkin Concert Hall (362-8060) on Nov. 17.

Dominican Republic a bargain-seeker's paradise

Sosua's splendor is stunning

By
MARLO FIELDSTONE

SOSUA, Dominican Republic —

The taxi ride from Puerto Plata airport to Sosua on the northern coast of the Dominican Republic is filled with visual splendor. Acres of sugar cane glimmer in the afternoon sun while in the background looms the majestic volcanic peak of Mount Isabel de Torres.

Five hundred years ago Columbus first saw this northern coastline shimmering in the silver light at sunset, and dubbed it Port of Silver, a place "where the mountains kneel to kiss the sea . . . the most beautiful land human eyes have ever seen."

Today's traveller quickly becomes aware that Columbus was not exaggerating. What Columbus could not see was that the northern coast has become the biggest bargain in the Caribbean.

The best buys are to be found in the small booming town of Sosua, 10 miles east of Puerto Plata where a deluxe dinner for two with wine costs $25 and exquisite amber necklaces start at $50.

The town was founded in 1940 by a small group of Jews who were given refuge from Nazi annihilation by the late dictator General Trujillo. Most of the refugees and their children have emigrated to the United States. The dozen families who have remained in Sosua have created the largest and best known dairy and meat processing industry in the country, Productos Sosua.

The meat and dairy products are sold in the company's modern supermarket. The food market displays a variety of foodstuffs that are native to the Dominican Republic. The country is rich in agricultural resources: sugar cane, bananas, cacao, pineapple, and coffee. Good buys are one pound tins of strong Santo Domingo coffee at $1.60, and coffee or amaretto liqueurs at $5 a bottle.

Since the country is virtually an agricultural Eden, and most foods are grown or processed with cheap labor, the price of meals is the biggest bargain in the Caribbean. Sosua is dotted with fine restaurants and cafes.

The Marco Polo and El Coral restaurants have spectacular views of Sosua Bay. They offer fine dining on local seafood dishes on outdoor terraces overlooking the bay. A meal at the best restaurant in Sosua is to be found at Sonia's. A complete French gourmet dinner with wine for two that would be $80 to $100 in Toronto is $20 to $30 in Sosua.

In fact, a strong desire to spend may overtake visitors. They know that they are cash rich with a favorable Canadian dollar. Most goods and services are easily available to tourists, but totally out of range to the average Dominican. Indeed, the average middle-class Canadian could not afford these "goodies" at home, from chauffered trips to the Casino to massages and manicures in the pampered privacy of their room.

The Dominican Republic makes the jet set lifestyle of the "Rich and Famous" available to the middle-classes of Europe and North America. Thus Sosua is a favorite destination of German, French-Canadian, and English-Canadian tourists.

Tour packages

Sosua's biggest bargains are packaged trips of hotel and airfare. Sunquest tours of Canada offers one of the best tour packages in Sosua. The low-key but elegant Sosua by-the-Sea Hotel is priced at $499 per person per week (double occupancy) in October and November.

The hotel architecture is a sort of whimsical combination of Alpine wood, Mediterranean stucco and terrazzo. Romantics cherish the fine dining of the Sunset Restaurant, its walls open to the gentle sea breezes, the moon and the silver Atlantic coastline.

The best buy in the Dominican Republic is amber. The greatest source of the resin is the Baltic coast. Although the Dominican Republic has the world's next largest amber cache. It is usually a honey-brown color, but colors run the gamut from pale golden yellow to deep red. The most valuable amber of all is that which encases insects, leaves and other prehistoric life in its golden depths.

In Sosua, little outdoor stalls and fine gift shops sell amber at reasonable prices. A small pair of stud earrings may start at $5. Larger pieces in deeper colors fetch from $25 to $50.

Bahamas discount card promises bargain rates for Canadian travellers

By JAMES MONTAGNES

NASSAU, Bahamas — Canadians coming to the Bahamas till Jan. 31, 1989, are being offered a discount card for goods and services at about 80 establishments in this 700-island West Indian region. The wallet-size Bahamas Discovery Card was introduced last year as part of the promotion for the 1992 500th anniversary of the discovery of the islands by Christopher Columbus.

This year savings of up to 25% are featured on attractions, dining and entertainment, while savings up to 50% are available on shopping. Participating are firms in Nassau and Freeport, including restaurants and shops. The discount cards, along with a booklet listing the establishments are available from travel agents when booking trips.

The Bahamas are popular with winter vacationing Canadians because they are among the closest warm weather destinations, about a three hour non-stop flight from Toronto or Montreal. Some islands are only a half-hour flight from Miami.

The islands are known for the miles of white sand beaches, the excellent deep-sea fishing, the spectacular reefs teeming with tropical fish, duty-free shopping on main islands, gambling casinos, sailboat races and history dating back to the discovery of the Americas in the 15th century.

Most short-stay visitors to the Bahamas come to New Providence or Grand Bahama islands to luxuriate at the large international hotels with their evening entertainment of dance bands, dance groups, stars of stage, screen and television.

Here too are government supervised gambling casinos, which attract many who come from the Miami area just for an evening of blackjack, roulette or dice.

Nassau, the main city on New Providence Island, is also for sightseeing. It is a major port for cruise ships, and sometimes you can find six or more ships at docks close to the downtown area.

The sightseeing will include various government buildings close to the shopping streets, a statue of Queen Victoria, botanical gardens, the Court House, a museum and the House of Assembly. Here too is a nearby straw market where you can purchase many hand-made items.

If you are up to it, visit Fort Fincastle built almost 200 years ago by slave labor. It is a few blocks from the shopping area, up a stairway of 65 steep steps carved out of the black rock. In season there is a waterfall alongside the steps, known as the Queen's Staircase. At the top of the hill is Fort Fincastle from where there is a fine view over Nassau below.

The duty-free shops line Bay St. which gets very crowded when cruise ships are in port. Here you can buy just about everything imaginable at very competitive prices, from liquor to electronic gadgets — but remember your import limit when you return to Canada.

In Freeport on Grand Bahama a tourist attraction has been built on a wide sand region. There are not only luxury hotels with licensed gambling casinos, but also international shopping areas, botanical gardens, a growing number of retirement colonies and small farming projects.

Throughout the 700 islands in the group, many of which are uninhabited, and some are leased to shipping companies to provide private beaches for their cruise passengers, you can go diving among coral reefs.

Some small hotels on islands like Eleuthera, Bimini and Andros, have special diving programs and schools, for there are nearby reefs and shipwrecks dating back a few centuries to explore. And for non-divers there are glass-bottom boat tours in Nassau Harbor, and from hotels on New Province island.

There are many ways to reach the less popular of the many islands. Most popular are trips by sailboat or motor cruiser, and a number of islands can be reached by air from Nassau. There are also inter-island ferry and cargo boats operating between the islands. And just about every island has fine white sand beaches, mostly uncrowded.

"Open now and waiting for you"

Yucatan resorts recover from Gilbert

NEW YORK — The Mexican Yucatan resort areas of Cancun, Cozumel and Isla Mujeres are "alive and well" after September's Hurricane Gilbert, says Mexico's Undersecretary of Tourism Promotion and Development Guillermo Grimm.

"Two-thirds of all hotel rooms in the Mexican Caribbean were not affected at all by the storm," Grimm told a press conference. "Of the one-third that were affected, 50% were back in business by Oct. 15, and by Dec. 1, the great majority of all rooms will be ready to receive visitors."

"Although some hotels and other tourism service facilities closed temporarily right after the hurricane, they took this opportunity to paint, redecorate and add new amenities, so that many properties will be better than ever during the upcoming winter season," he said.

All basic services, including electricity, water, sewerage and communications were restored shortly after the hurricane had passed, Grimm said.

The lush, tropical vegetation turned brown after the storm, giving the appearance of devastation, but today 40% of the plants are green again.

Within a few weeks, nature will be completely restored, said the undersecretary. In addition, shifting of sand did reconfigure some of the beaches, but "you can bask in the sun on Cancun's beaches right now," he said.

Grimm reiterated that the Mexican Caribbean is ready to receive visitors now, and many hotels and restaurants are offering their services at discounted rates. "We invite the travel industry and tourists to visit us now, this week. You will find everything in order and ready for you," he said.

Speaking at the same press conference, president of the Cancun Hotel Association Gabriel Escalante reiterated that the Mexican Caribbean is ready to receive tourists and provide an even higher level of service than before the hurricane.

"The Mexican Caribbean is open now and waiting for you," said Escalante.

National Geographic photo book a magnificent collection

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Long before I could satisfy my wanderlust and travel the world, I relied on the National Geographic Magazine to take me to distant places I dreamed about and thought I would never see.

Each month, I awaited the latest yellow-fringed edition with anticipation and eagerness, never knowing where the National Geographic would deposit me next.

Would it be an unspoiled rainforest in central Africa or a raucous Middle Eastern bazaar? Would it be a pristine Swiss alpine village or a market somewhere in India?

The photographs accompanying the articles on these faraway destinations never failed to be of the highest possible calibre. They were crystal clear, revealing and often incredibly inventive. And after all these years, I still remember them as if I had seen them yesterday, these photographs that one observer has aptly described as "this prolonged, quiet unfolding of genius."

These reminiscences came to mind as I glanced through a magnificent coffee-table book — Odyssey: The Art of Photography At National Geographic (Thomasson-Grant/Raincoast, $80.)

Containing 299 silver prints, autochromes and full-color images, this volume showcases a century of great photography.

Practically every photograph is a gem, a beautifully-crafted piece of work, but those which particularly caught my eye included a Sahara desert scene, an Egyptian mummy in repose, two old Polish Jews, snow-capped Mt. St. Helens, a sandy beach with bright blue and yellow umbrellas, laundry hanging between teeming tenements in Italy, brightly-colored fish swimming in the Great Barrier Reef and seals on an immense Antarctic ice cap.

Odyssey celebrates the adventurous spirit of four generations of photographers and, subliminally, warns us that our pollutant-assailed environment cannot be taken for granted.

Small business guide impressive

By
BRUCE PARKINSON

The Complete Canadian Small Business Guide (McGraw-Hill Ryerson Ltd. $34.95) is definitely a book whose time has come.

Never before in Canada has the profile of small businesses and the entrepreneurs who run them been so high.

The statistics prove that the high profile is justified.

- In the past decade the number of Canadian businesses has grown by more than 40%, from 600,000 to 850,000. During that same period, businesses with more than 500 employees decreased by 1.2%.
- More than 98% of all companies in Canada are small businesses.
- More than 100,000 Canadians between the ages of 15 and 24 own their own companies.

"There always has been an entrepreneurial spirit in Canada," said Doug Gray, who co-authored the guide with his wife, Diana Lynn.

But in the last few years, Gray said, "there has literally been an explosion" as governments, universities and the media have jumped on the small business bandwagon, offering grants and incentives, specialized courses, profiles of entrepreneurs and coverage of successful ventures.

Because studies have shown that more than 70% of the population "has a latent desire to work for themselves," the increased profile has stimulated many to take the plunge.

Gray calls the 561-page volume "an eclectic mix of insights gained vicariously and through our own experiences. There are a lot of street-smarts and insights, strategies, tips and tactics."

Between Gray and his wife there have been lots of experiences from which to choose.

He is a commercial and real estate lawyer and consultant who started his first small business at age 17 and has since started and successfully ran another half dozen.

Frequently interviewed by the media as an expert on entrepreneurship, Gray has given seminars, nationally and internationally, to more than 100,000 people.

His wife is a former chairperson of the Association of Women Business Owners and the founder of three companies which offer services to small- and medium-sized businesses. That contact has given her a wealth of experience.

One of the side-effects of the stampede of people opening small businesses — especially with fairly easy access to government loans — is that many of them are unprepared for the realities of running a company.

At the best of times small businesses have a high mortality rate: with so many people jumping in at once it may grow even higher.

Gray says there are several "classic pitfalls," for neophytes running companies. Some of them are as follows:

- "Poor fit." This is when entrepreneurs lack the personality or talents necessary for the type of business they are attempting to run.
- "Under-capitalization." Many would-be entrepreneurs are overly optimistic when projecting income and overly conservative when projecting expenses, Gray says. "They often run out of gas after six months."
- "Lack of a comprehensive business plan." This "dry-run" which is detailed in the book, is essential to help people deal with issues that are bound to arise.
- "Lack of commitment." Gray says many people are not prepared for the demands and the long hours involved in starting a small business. "This is the nemesis of the small businessman."

The Complete Canadian Small Business Guide gathers an impressive amount of information together, much of which was only available from disparate sources in the past.

Its 18 chapters cover everything from understanding financial statements, legal and tax considerations, buying a franchise, marketing, credit and collection, bankruptcy (let's hope not) to managing time and stress.

The guide also points the way to other resources, government programs, consulting services and trade and business associations.

Unless, and even if, you have a degree in business, the money spent on this volume will be an investment in your entrepreneurial future.

Israeli treasury gets boost as public retains bank shares

JERUSALEM (JPFS) — The Treasury chalked up a massive success in the first stage of the bank share redemption, when it became clear that the public intends to keep almost half of the bank shares it currently holds, rather than redeem them at the end of this month.

Oct. 19 was the last day in which households and firms could request the redemption of their holdings, which total about $1.5 billion, or over 40% of the $3.6 billion total coming up for redemption this month.

Reports from the three biggest banks indicated that between 50% and 60% of these bank-share owners had in fact demanded to redeem them, meaning that the rest had decided to accept the terms offered by the Treasury and hold onto their shares until the new redemption date, in 1991.

This is a remarkably high rate of "retention," when compared to initial estimates that less then 10% of the public would choose the Treasury's offer. Earlier in the month, the prevalent assumption in both Jerusalem and Tel Aviv was that the retention rate would be no higher than 15 to 20%.

The change reflects growing fears of a devaluation in the near future — the bank shares are dollar-linked — and the high price of other traded bonds on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange.

One side-effect of this development, however, is that the government will not acquire as large a percentage of the banks' equity as it had expected. This may affect the negotiations over the future ownership of the banks, especially the government's efforts to achieve voting rights for the bank shares.

Tax reform gets tough with real estate sector

Tax News

By AKI CHENCINSKI
LAURIE STARKMAN

In the world of tax, it's safe to say that "sometimes you win and sometimes you lose."

This oft-used quote takes on greater meaning when one examines the impact of the tax reform changes on various sectors of our economy. It is clear that the real estate industry is one sector that came out a big loser from the tax reform changes that became law on Sept. 13.

A number of changes were made to provisions that directly affect the real estate sector. More general changes including the increased taxation of capital gains will also have an impact on that industry. The common thread emanating through all these modifications is the negative impact they have for both real estate developers and investors. This article will examine some of these changes.

The tax depreciation rate for buildings purchased after 1987 has been reduced from the existing 5% to 4%. While this reduction may seem insignificant on the surface, it still represents a 20% decrease from the existing rate. This rate change will significantly reduce the available write-offs for tax payers with large real estate holdings. The stated intent of this adjustment was to bring the tax depreciation rate more in line with the actual depreciation rates of buildings.

There are a number of exceptions to this provision. In particular, additions or alterations made to existing buildings currently depreciable at 5% will remain eligible for that rate, but only to the extent of the lesser of $500,000 or 25% of the cost of the building.

The government has also developed a concept that will delay the availability of capital cost allowance (C.C.A.) on buildings under construction until the point in time the property is "available for use" for the purpose of earning income from business or property. Labelled the "available-for-use" rule, this concept is not scheduled to apply until 1990. A lot can happen between now and 1990; however, taxpayers considering a major real estate project may be wise to undertake it prior to that date.

The story only gets worse. Changes that affect the ability to deduct interest on funds borrowed to acquire vacant land and construction period soft costs will have an immediate impact on real estate developers. Real Estate developers who were previously exempt from the variety of provisions that restricted the deductibility of these costs will find that commencing in 1988 this will no longer be the case.

In general, the deduction for interest and property taxes on vacant land will be limited to the net income generated from the land. However, in cases where the taxpayer is a corporation whose principal business involves the resale, development or rental of real estate — for instance "principal business corporation (PBC)" — an additional deduction will be permitted. Such corporations will be able to deduct an amount equivalent to $1 million times the government's prescribed rate of interest for the year. Based on current rates, this provides a deduction of between $90,000 and $100,000. This additional deduction will have to be shared by corporations with a common ownership link.

In addition, principal business corporations now will also be subject to the limitation on the deductibility of soft costs that was applicable to other taxpayers. Soft costs include financing expenses, legal, accounting and other items incurred during construction that are not part of the hard cost of the building. However, as a concession, all non-deductible soft costs may be added to the cost of the building rather than land, thus providing for the capital cost allowance on these costs.

Both the limitations on the deductibility of soft costs and interest/property taxes on vacant land will be phased in over the next five years. This may allow real estate developers to adjust to these new provisions before the full brunt of their impact is felt.

In a related context, costs relating to obtaining financing that were previously fully deductible, will now be amortized over five years.

Ultimately everyone is either a tenant or owner of real estate, whether residential or commercial. These changes will increase the after tax cost of real estate to developers. As a result, all real estate "consumers" will likely be faced with higher prices or rents. Accordingly, taxpayers who are not directly affected by these new measures may find some truth in the familiar expression, "You can pay me now or you can pay me later."

Business fares to UK lower

TORONTO —

New savings on the low volume purchase of business class tickets between Canada and Britain have been announced by Wardair.

Following on the September launch of the airline's Premier Pass 2000 — a new offering that lowers the unit price of domestic airline tickets for the frequent traveler — Wardair is now extending its program to include flights to Britain.

Savings will be up to 40% off competitors' Business Class fares, the airline says.

The UK Premier Pass 2000 is a passport-like booklet containing eight open, 1-way vouchers for flights in business class between Eastern or Western Canada and London or Manchester, England. It is designed for four return flights.

The pass to Britain will be issued in limited quantities, and may be purchased through Wardair and travel agents in Canada and the UK. A booklet of eight 1-way vouchers from Eastern Canada costs $7,200 plus tax and from Western Canada, $7,800 plus tax. Vouchers may be used for travel between Nov. 7, 1988 and Dec. 31, 1989.

Premium Pass 2000 vouchers are fully transferable. Reservations can be made on a dedicated Wardair toll-free line (1-800-668-2274), or through a travel agent.

Wendy's burger chain opens Israeli location

TEL AVIV (JPFS) —

Wendy's fast-food chain — the third-largest fast food franchise in the world, after McDonald's and Burger King — will open on Dizengoff Circle here at the end of this month.

Wendy's kashruth status, however, is rather fuzzy, although there had been reports that the chain's operation in Israel would be kosher.

The local management said the food would be kosher, but the Dizengoff branch plans to be open on Friday nights and Saturdays, so it cannot apply for rabbinical kashruth certification.

Other outlets envisioned for Jerusalem and Petah Tikva, however, will observe Shabbat and have kashrut certificates, the company said.
